FOR THE
KIDNEYS, LIVER and Urinary Organs
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.
There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—whatever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.
For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.
For sale by all dealers.

DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINT.—Just now these are the most prevalent of all diseases. Nine-tenths of our ailments are due to these two sources. Shiloh's Vitalizer is the remedy you need for these complaints. If you think so call at our store and get a bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer; every bottle has a printed guarantee on it, and is recommendingly and if it does you no good it will cost you nothing. G. H. BOULTER, sole agent.

There were 1,540 entries at the east riding of Peterboro' show, and the gate receipts amounted to $279.

Dear Sirs,—I have been a sufferer from Costiveness, Sick headache and Loss of Appetite for many years, felt always tired, so that life was a burden and all second thought to me. I have had medical attendance, and have tried almost all the patent medicines, but without effect. A number of my neighbors, who have used your Pulmonic Oil of Health, urged me to give it a trial, three bottles of which made me feel like a new woman.
Mrs. BALL, 574 King street, Toronto.

KARS, Sept. 1st, 1883.
Wm. Churchill & Co, Gents,—I have been troubled with Catarrh for the past two years. Your Pulmonic Oil of Health was recommended to me by Mr. Lindsay of this place. After using one and a half bottles all symptoms of Catarrh have disappeared, and my health is so much improved that I have gained several pounds in flesh.
I am yours truly, Wm. LATIMER.
Cheese factories will shut down in a few days. The work of the season has been both productive and profitable.

$500.00 REWARD.
For any Testimonials recommending McGregor's speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Costiveness, Headache, etc., that are not genuine; none of which are from persons in the state of thousands of miles away, but from persons in and around Hamilton, Ont. We give trial bottles free of cost, so that you need not be deceived by purchasing a worthless article. Test its value before buying. Trial bottles and testimonials given free at PARKER & BUTLER'S Drug Store.

KRAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING.
Wife—What ails my husband, poor John.
Husband.—Oh, that neuralgia and toothache near kills me.
Wife.—Why don't you go to
PARKER & BUTLER'S Drug Store and get a bottle of Kram's Fluid Lightning, you know it cures all such things as toothache, neuralgia headache, lumbago, earache, sore throat, etc. It gives instant relief.

The preliminary survey of the north extension of the B. & N. H. branch of the Midland is progressing.

SALT RHEUM CURED.
Are you troubled with Salt Rheum, Rough Skin, Pimples or Canker Sores; if so go at once to PARKER & BUTLER'S Drugstore and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Price twenty-five cents. It was never known to fail.

The Midland railway system will shortly be under the direct control of the Grand Trunk and will be operated from Toronto. Mr. Cox, president of the Midland, retires. A new time table is to be arranged, and there will be two through trains between Port Hope and Midland.

BAD DRAINAGE.
There is nothing more productive of disease in a neighborhood than bad drainage. Open the culverts and sluiceways and purify the locality. The obstructions in the human system may be remedied in a similar manner by Burdock Blood Bitters, which opens all the outlets of disease through the Bowels, Liver and Kidneys.

Mr. Gandric, station agent at Campbellford, is to exchange places with the agent at Hastings.

A QUERY ANSWERED.
People often ask when is the best time to take a blood purifier? We answer, the best time is now. Burdock Blood Bitters does its work of purifying, regulating, and toning the system at all times and all seasons. Purity in all things is always in order when required.

Trent Valley Reflections by an Old Settler.

A correspondent of the Trenton Courier writes as follows on the Trent valley, its canal and its history:

Force miles west of Stirling, on the Trent river, Chisolm's rapids afford water-power to an unlimited extent. The government dam, erected in the early settlement of the country, raised the water for the distance of 16 miles, to Heely's Falls, overflowing thousands of acres of the finest lands, for which nothing but the most trifling remuneration was ever paid. Settlers had come on these lands, hewed out their houses in the wilderness, made clearing, and began to look forward to comfort and a competency for themselves and their children, when the government engineers and surveyors came along. At first there was anxiety enough, but still hope; but when realization came there was blighted hopes, and ruined homes. Our province was then under paternal government, the head of which was a military chief, in whose mind there never entered a thought, if we judge by the light of those days which has come down to us, of the rights and the interests of the people. At all events a feud between him and the people stood the executive and legislative council, who were independent of the people, who were appointed by the colonial minister in Downing street, and whose policy it was to make all laws, irrespective of the legislative assembly, and, of course, to plunder the people. These drowned lands were valued and a mere pittance was received by the settler. It was early youth many a time have I listened while parents, with tearful eyes, told of their wrongs and their sufferings.

After building the dam and docks at this place, the work was abandoned, and to within the past year or two the work remained a monument of engineering skill and government folly. Of course it was some benefit to the lumbermen, and one Daniel Morgan, who became by purchase the owner of the water privilege.

Many and daring have been the attempts to blow up this dam. In several instances they have been, in a measure, successful. Parties interested in the dam have at times kept strict watch with loaded rifles.

Now that the government has shown its intention to construct the Trent valley canal, and the Ontario Central railway running through this place, its importance as a water power will no doubt be taken into consideration by capitalists.

Some years ago our esteemed citizen Joseph F. Way, seeing the advantage of this place, purchased some 800 acres. He exerted himself manfully to secure a railway. The wily projectors of the Grand Junction held out inducements by permitting him to assume that they desired to build the shortest route. But they did not intend to put the road through this route—"not for Joseph," and used Mr. Way and friends as a foil to obtain bonuses out of Thurlow, Stirling and Rawdon, in which scheme they were partially successful.

Now, after the lands have passed out of the hands of Mr. Way, his anticipations are not only realized, but to excess, in case the Trent valley canal should become a certainty, proving truth to the old saw—"When it rains porridge, our kettles are upside down."

When we look through the "blue books" of our government and realize the enormous sum spent on the improvements in other quarters, and when we take into consideration the millions of revenue received by the government of old Canada prior and up to the confederation and alone taken from the Midland counties, we are amazed that the fertile tract of our province lying between the Ottawa and the bay of Quinte and the Georgian bay should not have received more consideration.

Let us suppose the original project of building the canal had been carried out, which would have at once opened large communication from the Georgian bay to tide-water, what would have been the effect on the carrying trade of the west? What the effect upon the tract of country I have named? It seems to me that this canal would have opened up not only a fine tract of country which up to the recent years has been cut off from settlement, but would have opened up facilities for manufactures, which, with the stimulus afforded by the western traffic, would have become a source of wealth not only to our province but to the dominion. What should have been accomplished years ago is now being slowly accomplished as a rival communication to railways, largely subsidized both by the local and dominion governments.—Courier.

Coming to Stirling.

Two weeks from next Wednesday and Thursday there will be exhibited in Rose's town hall, Stirling, one of the most magnificent panoramic combinations ever shown in Ontario. The name of Rev. J. T. Dowling is a household word in many homes in this village and township, where his qualities as a Christian gentleman and minister, and his abilities as an artist, are too well known to need mention here. Some seven or eight years ago, while living at Oshawa, he painted for a gentleman there a huge panorama of Oriental and Biblical scenery, consisting of forty large paintings 8 x 12 feet each. He exhibited in Cobourg last winter, Mr. Dowling has secured the temporary use of the series from its owner, and has combined it with his paintings illustrating the lecture, "The Mosaic vision of creation," and the larger ones illustrating "Views from the Tabernacle," making one of the most magnificent displays ever shown. This he has entitled the "Grand Panoramic Combination of Oriental and Biblical Illustrations," and it comprises all told forty paintings 8 x 12 feet each in size, six 7 x 12 feet, and five 12 x 18 feet, or fifty in all. The forty mentioned are painted in Mr. Dowling's best scenic style, and are even much superior as works of art to those exhibited in Stirling. The entertainment is not a lecture in any sense of the word, but just what its title indicates, and though taken on four minutes' space allowed to each picture, the series could not possibly be run through in one evening, and necessarily covers two evenings. The admission for each evening will be 25c., or season tickets (good for both evenings) 40c. Children 15c., season tickets 25c. In the afternoon of Thursday, at 4:15, a children's matinee will be given, when school and other children will be admitted for the trifle of 10c. each. Adults to matinee, 25c.

Rev. Dr. Wild, of Toronto, was present at the exhibition of this panorama at Cobourg on Friday night last, and at the conclusion he at once arose and moved a very hearty vote of thanks, in which he said "the paintings were the most excellent of the kind he had ever seen," which is high praise from a competent authority.

Remember the dates, Wednesday and Thursday, November 21st and 22nd. Tickets will be on sale, and posters with fuller particulars issued, at an early date.

A DETECTIVE'S EXPERIENCE.

His Successful Undertaking and Escape from an Impending Fate.

(Buffalo, N. Y., News.)

One morning several years ago, just as the dull, gray light was beginning to show itself in the east, a small band of men might have been seen deployed about a house on Perry street, in Buffalo. There was nothing special either in the dress or appearance of the men to indicate their intention, but it was plain that they had business of importance on hand. Suddenly a man appeared at one of the windows, took in the situation at a glance, and, swinging himself outward with wonderful quickness, scaled the roof of the house. This man was Tom Ballard, the notorious counterfeiter; and, armed to the teeth and fully realizing his situation, he defied justice and the officials below him. Some of the officers, knowing the desperate character of the man, proposed to shoot him until he was killed, but one of the number promptly protested, and declared that if his brother officers would assist him to ascend he would capture the man alive. Accordingly he began the difficult and dangerous task, and succeeded in bringing the prisoner to the ground in safety.

The man who accomplished this task was Mr. Thomas Curtin, the present superintendent of the city police of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Curtin is a man who is known by every prominent detective and policeman in America, and he stands pre-eminently in the front rank of his profession. Quiet and gentlemanly in appearance and manners, he possesses a courage, combined with marked physical powers, that make him the terror of evil-doers and the pride of law-abiding citizens. Few people can realize, however, the trials, exposures, and even privations, to which the members of every municipal police and fire department are exposed. Compelled to be on duty at uncertain hours, subjected to the most inclement weather, and often necessitated by the nature of their duties to protracted undertakings, they endure a nervous and physical strain that is terrible. Such was the experience of Mr. Curtin in former days; and it is not surprising that he found himself suffering from a mysterious physical trouble. In relating his experience to a representative of the paper he said:

"At times when I was on duty I would feel an unaccountable weariness and lack of energy. My appetite was also uncertain and my head seemed dull and heavy. I did not fully understand these troubles, but supposed, as most people suppose, that I was suffering from malaria. I tried to throw off the feeling, but it would not go. I thought I might overcome it, but found I was mistaken, and I finally became so badly off that it was almost impossible to attend to my duties. I have taken any number of men in the police and fire departments of this country who have been afflicted as I was, and I doubt not there are to-day hundreds similarly troubled who, like myself, did not know the cause, or really what ailed them."

"Your present appearance, Mr. Curtin, does not indicate much physical debility," said the interviewer as he looked at the 220 pounds of bone and muscle standing nearly five feet eleven inches in height before him.

"Oh, no; that is altogether a thing of the past, and I am happy to say that for more than a year I have enjoyed almost perfect health, although I realize that I was on the road to certain death by Bright's disease of the kidneys, and traveling at a very rapid pace."

"How did you come to recover so completely?"

"That is just what I want to tell you, for I believe it may be of great service to many others who are professional men who possibly hear of it. I began the use of a popular remedy at the earnest solicitation of a number of friends who had seen most from to my great gratification that I began feeling better. This feeling continued and I gained in strength and vigor until now I am perfectly well—and wholly through the instrumen ality of Warner's Safe Cure, which I believe to be the best medicine for policemen, firemen railroad men or any other class of people exposed to danger or a change of weather, ever discovered. Since my recovery I have recommended it everywhere, and never knew a case where it failed either to cure or benefit. I would not be without it under any consideration; and I am positive it is a wonderfully valuable and at the same time entirely harmless remedy. Indeed, I see that Dr. Gunn, dean of the United States Medical College of New York, indorses it in the highest terms."

"So you experience it its difficulty in the execution of your duties now, Mr. Curtin, do you?"

"None whatever. Our department was never in better condition than at present."

"And do you never have any fear of the desperadoes whom you have been the means of bringing to justice?"

"Not in the least. Such men do not try to retaliate, partially because they have not the courage, but chiefly because they respect an officer who does his duty."

The policemen, firemen, letter carriers and other public employees in this country have a peculiarly trying life. When, therefore, a simple and pure remedy that can restore and sustain the health of all such men is found, it should be the cause for great congratulation, especially when recommended by such a man as Superintendent Thomas Curtin of Buffalo.

OH! WHAT A COUGH.
Will you heed the warning? The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that most terrible disease—consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford to run the risk of 50c. to cure the disease, and do nothing for it. We know from Experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a million bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and whooping-cough at once. Mothers, do not be without it. For hoarseness, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. G. H. BOULTER, sole agent.

A GOOD INTRODUCTION.
J. Kennedy, a merchant in Dixie, about three years ago introduced Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam to his customers by trying it in his own family for Coughs and Colds. Being pleased with results, large sales followed, and it is now the favorite remedy in that neighborhood.

ANOTHER WITNESS.
A. Chard, of Stirling, testifies to the efficacy of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which he used for a badly injured knee joint. It is the great household remedy for inflammation, pain, soreness, lameness, etc., and is used both internally and externally with infallible success.

Curing a Drunkard.

REV. M. B. MOORHOUSE, M. A.

A wise old Earl of former days,
Kind hearted, but tenacious
Of certain notions, words, and ways,
Yet wishful to seem gracious,

Hit on a plan to save his mind
Much worrying opposition,
By seeming deaf when disinclined
To change his fixed decision.

Thus might the clever noble seem
His course unchecked to steer,
Not by what others said to him,
But what he wished to hear!

One favorite servant, born and bred
On his estate, rose faster
Than all his men, till he was made
Head coachman by his master.

But one sad fault did John possess—
The fatal love of drink,
And off this habit of excess
Brought him to ruin's brink.

"Discharge him!" would my lady plead,
In accents loud and fervent;
My lord still answered, "Yes, indeed,
He is a first-rate servant!"

"No, no!" she cries, with anger wild,
"He drinks in manner fearful!"
"Ay, ay! he's been here from a child,
And is both clean and faithful."

"I'm glad your ladyship has come
On generous thoughts to start us,
For, as you say, a paltry sum
Of wages should not part us."

But John upset the coach one night
While home his lady driving;
Though not much hurt, except with fright,
She thought this partiality forgiving.

Straight to the Earl she rushes in,
Resolved this time to make him
Know all the blackness of John's sin,
When vengeance must o'ertake him.

"Behold!" she says "Your John's last crime!
An angel it would vex:—next time
He'd surely break our necks!"

"Ay?" quoth my lord, "is poor John sick?
Alas, I'm sorry for him."
"No!" screams my lady, passion quick,
"A drunken fit you almost o'er him!"

"Ay!" sighs my lord, "above all price
Are all such faithful men,
We'll have the very best advice
To put him right again."

Out rushed the lady in a fume,
And sent word to the stable
Straight to his lordship John must come,
Although to stand scarce able.

Kindly his master looked at him
As if he saw no error;
While poor John quaked in every limb
With alcohol and terror!

"Why! John! they tell me you are ill,
I see you cannot stand;
You must to bed, and there lie still
To wait the doctor's hand.

"For you I have a great regard,
So have no apprehension;
While you behave so well, I were hard
If sickness lacked attention!"

John, thus dismissed, was borne upstairs.
And put to bed instanter;
While out of sight, like frightened hares,
Went bottle and decanter.

For head and shoulders blisters raw
The Earl's command pronounces;
And from the arm he bids them draw
Of blood some sixteen ounces.

John found himself, when he awoke,
In pitiful position;
And heard, with feelings past a joke,
The cause of his condition.

No company, but one old dame
To nurse him—kindness cruel!
No solid food, but with bitter same
Dull round of water-gruel!

No remedy by John was seen
But to submit with grace;
Better have fifty blisters keen
Than lose good place!

Twice every day, with formal care,
His lordship sends enquiries,
To know how his dear patient fares,
And how the fever's rife.

"What, what!" poor John no better yet?
Well, tell him he must tarry
In bed till he the turn doth get;
These bouts are dangerous, very!"

Then to her ladyship he states
The fever's slow abatement,
And gravely both congratulates
On prompt and skilful treatment!

Seven weary days John slowly passed,
Of strength almost reduced him,
When the Earl thought fit to hear at last
The fever now had left him.

An altered man in truth he came
When summoned by his master,
In every look he bore the shame
Of barely 'scaped disaster.

"Well, John, I'm glad to see you there,
I hope this bout is over;
And now we trust with further care
You'll perfectly recover."

"I humbly beg," here John broke in,
"Your lordship's gracious pardon,
I promise never to repeat the sin
So be not me too hard on."

"Ay, my good fellow, you say right,
We can't prevent all sickness;
But you must own my physic bright
Cures it with magic quickness."

"So mind, if you are ill again,
Be sure that I shall see it,
Even if yourself should not complain,
Upon my conscience be it."

"I promise you shall always have
The same advice and nursing,
For we must use strong means to save
Some men their lives from cursing."

"I thank your lordship from my heart,
There shall be no more need,
The medicine made my head smart,
But cured my faults indeed."

The Earl replies, "I hope so too,
But long as you stay here,
While you do your part, I'll to you
Do mine, John, never fear!"

Henceforth my lady rode in peace,
John's driving no more alarmed her,
For Temperance made his drinking cease,
And quite escaped the doctor!

It Looked That Way.

At one of the Northern depots lately an old lady, whom an inward train had just deposited, timidly approached a brakeman and asked if he knew whereabouts on the line her nephew was employed. "Ahmer?" said the railroad man. "Oh! he's been changed about considerable lately. He fired the John Edward till she ditched the graves and he got stove in. When he came out they gave him the Lizzy for a while, then he broke the two-eight passenger till she jumped a knee-nothing, and he got pinched somewhere and now I believe he's spare round the yard. You see he's hard luck." The old lady stood speechless for a moment as if trying to digest the idioms of the railroad, and then said softly, as if at a hazard, that she "thought he had."

Strong Temperance States.

—It is said that Georgia is one of the strongest temperance states in the American Union. There are already eighty-seven counties in Georgia where no legal authority can be obtained to sell liquor, and the sentiment continues to grow. In Maryland, of the twenty-three counties fourteen have prohibition, and but nine license.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

The Green-coated Soldier.

BY DAVID KER.

Many a long year ago three or four regiments of Russian soldiers were encamped on a flat sandy plain upon the shore of the Gulf of Finland, not far from a new town which had just been built at the mouth of the river Neva, and called St. Petersburg. The sun was beginning to set, and the line, having finished their marching and exercising, were having a rest after the day's work or beginning to get really their supper.

Most of them were strong and sturdy fellows who looked as if they could stand good deal of hard work, and hard fighting too, before giving in. But they certainly did not wear a very soldierly or warlike air for all that; they dressed heavily and clumsily, and handled their muskets as if they had been more used to ploughs and spades than weapons of war.

Awkward though they seemed, however, these very men were to be little, only a few years later, to give King Charles of Sweden (who was then thought to be the best soldier alive) such a beating that neither he nor his army ever meddled with Russia again. But as they were now, they made a poor figure enough; and so, no doubt, thought a big red-haired man in Russian uniform, who, with his arms folded on his broad chest, and a scornful smile on his face, was watching half a dozen of them light a fire.

"Pretty fellows you are to call yourselves soldiers!" cried he, in broken Russian, "when you can hardly tell a butt of a gun from its muzzle, and don't even know how to kindle a fire yet. We were better things better in Silesia, where I was born and bred.

"W-ll, if your country is so much better than ours, why didn't you stay there? asked one of the Russian recruits, sullkly.

"Because I was wanted here to make you Russian lubbers into soldiers," answered the Silesian fiercely; and a mighty hard job it is."

The recruit muttered something between his teeth, but did not venture to make any direct reply; for the Silesian, Michael Kratsch, was a noted bully, and the strongest man in the regiment, and any one who tried to argue with him generally ended by getting a broken head for his pains.

While Kratsch was still fuming and finding no one to vent his anger upon, a little drummer-boy, coming past with a can of water much too heavy for his thin arms, stumbled against him by accident. Like lightning Big Michael faced round and dealt the poor little fellow a kick which sent him to the ground, screaming with pain, and caused him to spill every drop of precious water that had cost so much trouble to bring.

An angry murmur ran through the group of Russians, and the Silesian turned savagely upon them.

"What are you growling at, you dogs? If you have anything to say to me, say it out. You ought to know by this time, I should think, that one honest Silesian is a match for half a dozen such as you!"

"Are you quite sure of that?" asked a deep voice behind him.

Every one looked round with a start, for nobody had noticed a soldier standing near the group, and listening to the Silesian's boastful talk with a smile of quiet amusement.

The new-comer picked up the little drummer boy very tenderly, rubbed his eyes with a bunch of dock leaves near, and sent him away rejoicing. Then he came up to the tall Silesian and looked him full in the face.

Kratsch eyed the stranger from head to foot, and did not altogether like the look of him. His dress was nothing grand, to be sure; being simply the plain green coat of a Russian soldier, but he had seen at once that an old-clothes man would scarcely have taken it as a gift. But he was as tall as Big Michael himself, while his broad chest and brawny chest made such a show of strength that most people would have thought it much better to shake hands with him than to fight him.

"So!" said the green coated man, quietly, "one Silesian is a match for half a dozen Russians, eh? Well! I can see that he's their match at bragging, anyhow!"

The Russians chuckled at this unexpected hit, and one of them laughed outright. Kratsch's face flushed purple with rage, and for a moment he seemed just about to fly at the speaker's throat. But there was something in the stranger's bearing, and in the calm, steadfast glance of his keen black eye, which cowed even the fierce soldier, who drew back with a sullen growl.

"Well," said Greencoat, quietly, "we Russians have a saying that corn doesn't graw by talking. If you are a match as you say, for any half-dozen of us, let us see what you can do."

"Could you throw that stone farther than I can?" at the Silesian, pointing to a heavy stone at his feet.

"I can better answer that when I have seen you throw it," replied Greencoat, as coolly as ever.

Michael Kratsch threw off his coat, and baring an arm as thick as an ordinary man's knee, hurled the stone seven good yards away.

The Unknown threw, in his turn, so carelessly that he seemed hardly to have meant to sell at all, yet the stone fell a foot beyond Kratsch's mark.

The Russians raised a shout of triumph, and Michael's face grew as black as midnight.

"Are you as nimble with your feet as with your hands?" growled he, through his teeth.

"Try," answered Greencoat, simply.

Kratsch pointed to a tree about a little behind them, and taking a short run, shot through the air like an arrow. The ditch was fully fifteen feet wide from bank to bank, yet he alighted several inches from it.

"Pretty fair," said the Unknown, smiling; "but I think I can do better."

And so he did, for his leap overpassed Kratsch's by six inches at least. At the sight of the heavy Russian faces grinning from ear to ear over his discomfiture the Silesian's eyes flashed fire.

"You haven't done with me yet," he roared, "smart though you think yourself. Dare you wrestle a fall with me?"

Without a word the stranger threw off his coat and stepped forward.

It was a grand and terrible sight to see the two giants strain their mighty limbs and seek each other with their iron arms, both faces growing suddenly hard and stern as they grappled. Every man among the lookers-on held his breath as the great struggle began.

Twice the Silesian make a tremendous effort to throw his nearly equal strength, that seemed able to tear up an oak by the roots. But the Russian, though shaken, stubbornly kept his feet, until Kratsch passed, breathless and utterly spent.

Then the watching eyes all round saw the stranger's arms tighten suddenly, the Big Michael's huge broad back bend slowly in. Furiously he struggled against the overmastering clutch, but he had no more chance than an ox in the coils of a boa. At last the Unknown lifted him fairly off his feet, and hurled him backward with such force that he fell with a dull crash against a large stone behind him, and lay stunned and motionless.

Just then was heard a cry of "There he is! there he is!" and several richly dressed men, running up to the spot, bowed reverently to the green coated soldier.

"Whatever are you looking for your Majesty," said one of them, "to give you these dispatches which a courier has just brought from Moscow."

At the word "Majesty" the Russian recruits all fell on their knees, considerably startled to find that this shabby-coated private was no other than the Czar himself, Peter the great of Russia.

"Up with you, lads!" cried Peter; "kneel to no one but God. You are Russian soldiers, and I'm your General; that's all."

Then he turned to Kratsch, who lay groaning on the ground, with his left arm broken.

"I'll forgive thee this time, fellow," said the Czar; "but if ever I catch thee illtreating a child again, look out! As for these soldiers of mine at whom you laugh, within five years they shall be the wonder of all Europe."

And so they were.

The New Silks.

Every little while there is an odd little announcement through the column of fashion-journals that plain black silk has re-asserted its supremacy and acquired new fresh distinction and prestige. The assertion is made at regular intervals every year, and has been for twenty-five years past, and it is always found true simply because that the writer of the paragraph has obtained a new black silk dress and is bound to offer the information. The black silk dress of silk always has a character and a standing of its own which is unaffected by the changes of fashion, but it addresses itself mainly to those who make no pretensions to fashion—to elderly ladies and well-to-do matrons who want a solid dress which looks sufficiently handsome for all occasions and is not out of place upon any. To such persons no other fabric ever takes the place of a new silk or gross-grained silk, and every lady, whatever her pretensions, likes one black silk in her wardrobe because of its convenience.

But of late there are new styles that dispute pre-eminence with old-time favorites—the black surahs, a soft, swollen silk with a satin finish, have established themselves in a place from which it will be very difficult to dislodge them. They are not the glossy or remarkable silks in any way, but they are adaptable. They lend themselves to careful arrangement, they drape supple and youthful, which "rich" black silks of the gross-grain type are not, and they are not only durable but economical in their wearing. No wonder they are popular—no wonder they are in demand and have forced the New York manufacturer, John N. Stearns, to produce a "winter" surah of superior quality and finish in seventy-five different shades and colors, of which the wines, the purples, and the new shades with a copper tint in them, promise to be the favorites for the present and coming season. The difficulty with the Stearns surah is that it is less durable than silks less distinctively marked, but it is handsome and effective, and the late designs make wrinkles and folds look as they are enclosed in lines of color, and combined with a plain Ottoman fabric.

But the brocaded silks and satins are best suited for a really elegant toilet, for the designs grow constantly more striking, more artistic, better contrasted, and more gaily adapted for the purpose of display, without vulgarity or ostentation. The finest designs are large, and show convention alized forms of fruits with leaves, or leaves and a flower. They are in solid colors, such as evening blue, pink, cream, white, and black, and they require but little adornment—for the simpler the form in which they are made the better—but the little should, of course, be of the best quality, that the beauty of the design is derived from the contrast in texture, and the effects obtained from the combination of armure or Ottoman ribs, or plain, dull satin, with gross drapery leaves, and a veining which seems to be executed in embroidery stitch. The whole ensemble is very rich, and would, I believe, when exhibited on the counters of leading dry goods stores, that they are of American (and New York) manufacture, the general impression in regard to American silks having been obtained from the spun silks, which has a finish so much like the obsolete poplin.

Other novelties produced by our own manufacturers consists of stripes—"hair stripes" they are called—in two combinations. Upon these are brocaded flowers of the third color, which is in contrast to the ground tone, but produces no violent shock, on the contrary, the effect is rich, but bright and cheerful, and seems to suggest them as suitable fabrics for dinner dresses or evening receptions at home. The brocaded satins are the stuffs intended for suits and costumes any very beautiful satin brocades in small figures are intended for combination with plain velvet or plain satin duchesse. The grounds are dark cloth shades, the figures look like jewels, are not only small, but in high colors—old gold, ruby, and amethyst—and would have the effect of embroidery upon satin, at a little distance. Sunset silk is a soft brocade in very large figures, and effective patterns in white, with blue or pink color through it, which gives it an undescribable glow—a sort of reflection of color, which is infinitely more delicate than it would be if the new brocades have amure effects—those that are imported as well as those that are produced here—and the figured plushes are reappearing for cloaks, and combination with a new satin that is woven with a diagonal rib, which is very effective and is, therefore, better adapted to hard good wear, while it is equally thick and contains as much silk.

The tapestried silks are yet principally used for upholstery, but some ladies are beginning to combine them with velvet, and to use them for side fronts of full dresses in conjunction with Watteau trains of dull, thick satin or velvet. The silver and gold brocades with flowers in color are an important element this season, and last, in the construction of magnificent evening toilets—but these will occupy attention later on. At present it is the footing of those who have only one or two new silks of a season, and who know exactly what they want—and are providing against the advance of the gay season, while the majority are occupied in settling the present more important questions of autumn cloth and woolen suits, deciding whether braiding is or is not to be, and how a cloth suit can best be made to look jaunty and becoming.

Have You a Headache?

Take the glass part of a thermometer out of the frame; hold the bulb under your tongue; wait one minute. Now look. It is 99 degrees. That tells you how warm your blood is. Now hold it under your foot. Don't be in a hurry; give it a chance to feel the exact state. Down it goes to 65 degrees. That tells you how cold your feet are,—33 degrees between your tongue and your feet.

Don't you know that equable circulation means good health, and that the loss of it means ill health? Let us see. You have a headache. Your hands are cold and throbs. Your feet are icicles. Now put your feet in a pail of hot water. In six minutes you say, "O! marvelous! the pain is all gone! rush in my head is all gone!" You have headache about half the time? No? Well, that pain is gone for good, if you will be sure that every day you have some bad feeling about the head and neck or chest or back? Now let us see what circulation is. It is very rare that a hot foot-bath will not remove all these bad feelings for the time being. Why does this do this? Why, it means that there is too much blood in the head or neck or shoulders or back, and that there is a lack of it in the feet and legs. A hot foot-bath draws the blood down below, and takes the excess of blood from the upper parts. That's exactly the philosophy of it. Of course the hot foot-bath is a bad thing, but it serves to illustrate the "law."—Dio Lewis.

The Queen, we are glad to see, proposes to give her granddaughter quite a nice dower without asking the country for any part of it. This is right, but could not to be followed in all cases? And what is the use of giving the young man who is to marry the granddaughter offices which have no duty attached to them for the simple purpose of adding to his income? If the places are sinecures why not abolish them instead of making them the means of supporting impecunious Royalty?

Preparations are being made in Montreal for the holding of a winter carnival similar to that of last year.

A Hashish House in New York.

We passed before a gloomy-looking house, entered the gate, and passed up the steps. The windows were absolutely dark, and the entrance way looked dirty and dingy plate. Four pulls at the bell, a pause, and one more pull were followed by a few moments' silence, broken only by the sound of falling chain, rasping bolt, and the grinding of a key in the lock. The outer door was cautiously opened, and a word from my companion we passed into the vestibule. The outer door was carefully closed by some one whom I could not distinguish in the utter darkness. A moment after the inner door was opened, and never shall I forget the impression produced by the sudden change from total darkness to the strange scene that met my eyes. The dark vestibule was the boundary line separating the cold, dreary streets and the ordinary world from the fairy land of magic romance.

A volume of heavily scented air, close upon the heels of which came a deadly and sickening sweetness, met us. Silks and satins had ever smelled, greeted my nostrils. A hall lamp of grotesque shape flooded the place with a mellow light that filtered through crenated disks of some violet fabric hung below it. The walls and ceilings, if they existed, were no longer so, for they were shut in and hung by festoons and plaits of heavy cloth—fresh from eastern looms. Flasses of blue, green, yellow, red, and tinsel here—and there peeped forth, matching the curious odgrees of variously colored leaves—the ever-present fabric of drapery like a huge procession of luminous ants, and seemed to flow into little phosphorescent pools wherever the cloth touched or caught up. Queer figures and strange lettering, in the same work, were here and there disclosed upon the ceiling cloths.

Along one side of the hall between two doors, were ranged huge tubs and pots of majolica like ware and blue-necked Japanese vases, in which the feathery shrubs and flowers of the most exquisite color and odor. Green vines clambered up the walls and across the ceiling, and catching their tendrils in the balustrades of the stairs (which were also of a curious design), threw down long sprays and heavy festoons of verdure.

As my companion, who had passed a moment to give me time to look about me, opened one door, and led the way into the hall, I followed him, and passed into a small room on the right, where, with the assistance of a colored servant, we threw off our cloaks, hats, and shoes for others more in keeping with our surroundings. First a long plush cloak quilted with silk drawn the front, and irregularly ornamented in bead and braid with designs of serpents, flowers, crescents, and stars, was slipped on over the head. Next a tasselled smoking cap, one dormed, and the feet incased in noiseless list slippers. In any other place or under any other circumstances I would have felt ridiculous in this costume, but so in keeping was it with all I had seen, and so thoroughly had I become the entire fairy world of which the dark vestibule, that I felt perfectly at home in my strange dress. We next crossed the hall to a similar room, where a young man, apparently a Frenchman, furnished us on the payment of two dollars each, with two small pipes and a small covered bronze tray, or urn, filled with a peculiar dry mixture which I subsequently learned was gunjah (the dried tops and leaves of the hemp plant), or hashish (the juice of the plant). In exchange for our money, the gentleman of the pipes, also gave us a little box which contained some small black lozenges, consisting of the resin of hemp, flavored with cinnamon, clarified, butter, and honey, and known in India as Majoon, amongst the Moors as El Mogen.

Passing from this room we ascended the richly carpeted stairs, enarbored by vines, and paused upon a landing, from which three doors opened. Upon one a pink card bore Dryden's line,

"Take the good the gods provide thee."

The nob turned by my friend's hand allowed the door to swing open, and, Welcomed by a spice breeze from India, we were truly in paradise.

"This," he said in a whisper, "is the public room, where we can smoke our pipe or loll, and enjoy and pretend, may enter and indulge—eat, smoke, or dream, as best suits him."

Wonder, amazement, admiration, but faintly portray my mental condition. Prepared by what I had already seen and experienced for something wild and Oriental, still the magnificence of what now met my gaze far surpassed anything I had ever dreamed of, and brought to my mind the scenes of the Arabian Nights, forgotten since boyhood until now. My every sense was irresistibly taken captive, and it was some moments before I could realize that I really was not the victim of some dream, for I seemed to have wholly severed my connection with the world of fact. I felt as if I had stepped back several centuries into the times of genii, fairies and fountains—into the very land of Sinbad the Sailor.

Not an inharmonious detail marred the symmetry of the whole. Beneath, my feet was a thick and deep rug, as velvety carpet—a sea of subdued colors. Looked at closely, I found that the design was that of a garden; beds of luxurious flowers, stars and crescents, and geometrical figures and plots, made up of thousands of rare exotics and richly colored leaves. Here a brook, which flowed in a serpentine course, from which peeped coy violets and tiny bluebells; there a serpenting gravelled walk that wound in and out amongst the exquisite plants, and everywhere a thousand shrubs in bloom or bud. Above, a magnificent chandelier, consisting of six dragons of beaten gold, from new lease of life they sprang flames, the light from which, striking against a series of curiously set prisms, reflected and refracted it into a thousand glancing beams that illuminated every corner of the room. The rows of pillars being of clear and variously colored glass, and the dragons slowly revolving, a weird and ever-changing hue was given to every object in the room.

All about the sides of the spacious apartment, upon the floor, were mattresses covered with different colored cloth, and edged with heavy golden lace; upon them were carelessly strewn rugs and mats of Persian and Turkish handicraft, and soft pillows in all colors and various shapes. Some divans there were ever blending and constantly presenting new combinations.—H. D. Kane, M. D., in Harper's Magazine for November.

Dyeing the Hair.

Dyeing the hair is a nasty habit, and as vulgar as it is nasty. It is a practice with people from whom better things might be expected, persist in doing this. Why, will they? It does not improve the looks, for on its part, it decidedly disfigures the face, and is an object of reverent regard, and a very efficient aid to devotional feelings, but one which has the artificiality and made-apess of dyed hair about him never can.

We have already said that hair-dye ing is ridiculous. It is more than that. It is highly injurious and for health reasons ought not to be done. It is besides quite incompatible with perfect cleanliness and is essentially vulgar and low bred.

SIX MONTHS ON THE CONGO.

Full Text of the Great African Explorer's Letter—Friendly Natives Give Stanley an Ovation—A Population of Wealthy Land—The Natives know Who their Best Friend is.

Extracts of a letter from Stanley, the great African explorer, to a friend in Boston, have been published. The following is the letter in full. It is dated Stanley Pool, Congo river, July 13.

You must have read the sensational telegram that appeared in the English papers, stating that one of our stations had been attacked, and the chief of the expedition gravely wounded. It was sent by the Dutch house which, strange to say, has joined our missionaries, who have a station at Vivi, located at the mouth of the Congo, the slightest rumor of trouble is exaggerated. It was to be expected, and I should have allowed for being dwarfed so suddenly to Congo again, when I was very unfit as you know, to view matters clearly. For the rest, my character we were told. The chief had been shot in the arm, but no station had been attacked. Our friends were very heartily disliked, and it seems that the attempted to discourage him. This proved successful, for he left the expedition without a responsible head, and for the past three years half a dozen clamorous claimants. In even three days, I received so many, and orders were respected by the mass, and the chiefs of stations also getting discouraged that I was a state of affairs, very soon had gone home. This was a sad state of affairs, but no station was in danger of attack.

Six months have brought wonders. The natives, after comparison, have begun to think we are their best friend, and my long absence from the Congo did more to impress them favorably toward me than my three years in their presence had done. Yesterday All along the line I received an ovation, and each district testified its joyous character. Yesterday at the grand meeting of the tribes, I had to dilate on this. Since I have arrived carriers have appeared by hundreds, and the prospects for transportation has but I a importance; that is, I am no longer anxious about the future. Our stations can be supplied easily with native help, though I once doubted that natives would be prepared in force enough to do reliable and efficient service. Now I am hopeful.

Since I left Vivi, the Congo last December I have been up as far as the equator, and have established two more stations, besides discovering another lake, and have been exploring for one hundred miles or there abouts, the river known on my map as the Ikelamba, but which is called the Mobangi. It is not as large as I stated in my book, but a stream the size of the Arkansas, deep, broad and very navigable. The big stream which Expedition came from, and the largest of the south Congo basin must be somewhere higher up. Having become better acquainted with the country I was enabled to pass with the dense population of the equatorial part of the basin, which, if it were uniform throughout, would give 40,000,000 souls. The number of products and the character of the people are likewise remarkable. The gums, rubber, ivory, camphor, wood and a lot of other things would pay for transportation, even by the very expensive mode at present in use. The people are born traders, and are the African, very enterprising and industrious. They are bold in their expeditions, and risk everything to turn an honest penny.

My reception by this people was very flattering. Two incidents which occurred will keep my memory green for some time. A population district was thickly populated well, and there was nothing but war, threat cutting, carving off of women, and much other atrocious evil. One day I was able to more prosperous times had visite I one of my stations below, and we had purchased a fine large canoe from him, which we had named us. He was delighted at the sight of the past, and called out, "We went ashore and made up our minds to halt and buy provisions. It was then I learned that the chief was at war with his former friends, and among the names of the chiefs that he mentioned was one who had plundered Tuckey with one of my subordinates. The causes of the war and all else I soon learned, and I then asked:

"How long have you been fighting?"

"Two months."

"Can I not do something to stop it?"

"Oh, yes, if you will. They will all listen to you." We are well tired of it, because we lose money and life, but we dare not ask for peace first."

I sent two of my boats to the rival chiefs and told them if they wished to see me and to make brotherhood with me, to stop the war. "We have it in your hands," I said. "You decide as to who is wrong, and let the guilty party pay a fine." Three days' talk settled the matter, peace was declared, and I was elected father of the two chiefs and country. A little below there was another populous district called Hondi. They heard of what I had done, and came to me with hearty welcome. Here also I was elected father and mother.

I have been delighted with my trip and enjoyed robust health. Indeed I feel at this moment as strong and as active as ever. The only anxiety I have is for the new Europeans, who, before they are acclimated or before they have learned the simple art of doctoring themselves, are a great trouble, though I have two doctors with the sick.

Censors of the Press.

What is to be done with this plan of making the collectors of customs censors of the Press and judges of what is obscene or the reverse? When is a book obscene? Smollett's works are pretty "high." So is Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass." So are Dandet's works and Zola's, and many others to say nothing of Pindar, and others of that stamp. How these works are sold in all our book stores and may be found, Turn suspects in Parliamentary libraries at Ottawa, Quebec and possibly Toronto. How is that? Is it worth while to be quite so fussy about not straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. It is said that the number of obscene works in the Library of Congress, or in the Parliamentary Library at Ottawa will be found very considerably large. How is that? Where are the censors? And why is the weeding out process not very stringently proceeded with? What about the nude statuettes of Venus and Cupid in shop windows? TRUTH supposes that only prudes object to this sort of thing. Possibly, still we women prudes are in a pitiful way. We don't help things greatly. Some are prudes enough to fancy that they do more harm than either Paine or Voltaire. If we could only be sure that we could read either reads or knows anything about them. It is quite otherwise when youths and maidens, men and women, cast lascivious eyes upon the suggestively nude figures which lovers of taste do worship. Heaven! it is very hard to say what human nature all the difference. But what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If the one class of people may be allowed to go to not to go Scot free, still less be lauded to the skies.

The New Public Executioner of England.

A telegram was recently received at Bradford from James Berry, who was in London, stating that he had been appointed public executioner for the Corporation of the City of London only, and that he was going to the Home Office, as he stated, to "receive and sign." Berry is about 30 years of age, is at present employed as a messenger by the firm of Messrs. Hyde, wool dealer, Ivegate, Bradford, and was some time ago, for a short time, a member of the Bradford Borough Police. He was a friend of Mr. Marwood, and had frequent discussions with him on the best and most effective modes of "despatching" criminals.

Woollens.

Among the new winter materials are woollens, with patterns in checks; these patterns are flowers or leaves in same shades on plain grounds; some are outlined in fine contrasting shades, the checks figures.

Some Notable Dates.

Friday was a red letter day in the history of days, for it was on the 12th of October that Christopher Columbus landed on Watling Island, one of the Bahamas, in the year with which every school boy is familiar, and which needs no mention here or elsewhere to say that in nine years more it will be four hundred years since that event took place. It need hardly be added that though Columbus was the first to proclaim to the world as large a tract of the new and vast region in the direction of the setting sun, he cannot be said to have been the first European discoverer of America. The ancient Scandinavians or Northmen had for centuries previous to the 11th century not only settled colonies in Greenland but explored the whole east coast of America as far as Massachusetts Bay, and there, in New Bradford in the State of Massachusetts, they planted a colony. Indeed, the entire coast of America for following that in the 12th century the celebrated Welsh Prince, Madoc, having sailed from his native country with several ships, and founded a colony on the coast of Virginia. Still all this does not take away from Columbus, the great, broad, philanthropic and unique merit of having philosophically reasoned out the existence of a New World, and by practically accepting the truth of his propositions of inaugurating that connection between the Eastern and Western Hemispheres which has ever since led to such a revolution in the world's history. Will have to Columbus and the 12th of October.

But if Friday was remarkable for some occurrences, some births and some deaths, Saturday is not much behind it, for some say that though it has no discovery of America to show. There is quite a nice catalogue of births, but not quite so extensive as that belonging to any but that of Sophia, the old Electress of Hanover, who, by giving England a King and a Queen, proved that "Sofi" (as she was familiarly called) was a very useful lady, and thus to show how she or her son study helped the British throne. Every school girl can do that. Curious to think, however, that she was born as far back as 1630, before the troubles of Charles I. her grandsire, but quite relative, had begun, and before he was very far on the journey which sent him to his grave without the latter.

And what about the deaths? Oh, there were quite a number. Reza the reformer dropped off in 1860; Harrison so well known in the Indian Mutiny, dropped off, was executed in 1660. Poor Murat, the brother-in-law of Bonaparte, got himself shot in Italy, and Mrs. Kemble passed on to the majority in 1845. Ah, perhaps that last mentioned person was the most remarkable of the lot. Mrs. Fry, philanthropist, made her name a household word to the world over, and has done so without it having to be said that she also attended to the wants and miseries of the world she neglected her own family. As a wife and mother she was most sedulous in attending to all domestic duties, and in bringing up her children, but she left her in the house as well as out of it. Good for them if the same could be said of her. Her philanthropic benefactions so called who have a mission to put themselves forward as intense "workers" in any good cause but who leave the entire subject, collection of neglected brats, and make their husbands standing reminders of the "little Pa," whom Dickens has sketched so graphically. Mrs. Fry, if she

FASHION NOTES.

Fanchon bonnets will remain in vogue.

Gray fur is the rage of the moment for hats and bonnets.

Sometimes a fresh trimming suffices to transform a dress.

Tiny checks are fashionable in both silk and woollen fabrics.

Combinations of stuffs are as popular for cloaks as for dresses.

Combinations of brocade and shot glace are very fashionable.

Dots, macaroons and stars are popular designs in wool brochés.

Bonne figures, unless they are very fine, are excessively vulgar.

The blonde pelerine will be the favorite with bald and aesthetic women.

A singular English fancy is to combine ashes of roses with gold color.

Velveteen is the favorite fabric for trimming old woolen dresses.

Checked and brocaded fabrics are prettily combined with plain stuffs.

Imported hats and bonnets are noticeably large; those of last fall.

Dark Russian furs—black fox, hare, otter and sable—will be much worn.

Capes or large collars are worn on tight walking jackets by young ladies.

New shoulder capes are cut to produce a full epaulette effect on the shoulders.

Moss green, reseda, sage green and all shades of gray green are very fashionable.

Hats have high crowns and small brims, or else moderate crowns and broad brims.

Ladies spend their spare change for fine gilt ornaments this fall instead of bracelets.

Many new felt hats are high crowned with narrow brims and the trimmings all on one side.

Egyptian red is the most lasting of all the esthetic colors; it will be as popular as ever this winter.

The combination of velvet or velveteen with woolen fabrics grows in favor as the season advances.

Large bonnets are worn to excess on the other side, but American women will not give up the Fanchon.

Velvet epaulettes mounted on stiff muslin and wire appear on many handsome imported mantelettes.

There is a tendency toward the revival of colored wraps for occasions of high ceremony and for carriage wear.

The most exclusive and fashionable dressmakers of Paris announce the arrival of the short waists of the first empire.

Wide worsted braids are much used in trimming fall suits. Sometimes a line of fine gold soutache edges the wide braid, but this is only for home wear.

Amber-tinted velours of long, strong pile, with marabout fringe of the same color form many elegant sorties de bal, the ornamentation consisting of passementeries of brown and old gold silken cords, combined with gold soutache; pendants of rat-tail chenille showing gold and brown complete the decorative effects.

Shooting a Bear.

Even the oil excitement has failed to drive all of the wild animals out of McKean county. It is but a few years since the deuce threatened the existence of Jackson, and regulated by bears, wolves, wildcats, panthers, and deer. Oil and civilization have combined to drive them away, and the bears and wildcats have disappeared. There are still left, however, a few wolves, a score or two of bears, and any number of deer. Jim Jacobs, the veteran Indian bear hunter, yearly visits his favorite haunts in the wilds of McKean county. He has probably killed more wild animals than any living hunter east of the Rocky Mountains. The stories of his exciting adventure would fill volumes. Not long ago a farmer living in the eastern part of the county reported that several of his sheep had been killed by wolves. Recently John Anderson, a farmer, living on Plunderhill, five miles east of Bradford, on the line of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad, was awakened by the barking of his Newfoundland dog. At the same time he heard a strange scraping noise on the roof the shed in the rear of the house. Mr. Anderson called his sons, George, Charlie, armed themselves with guns and cautiously crept out of a side door. They found the dog barking at a big black bear which was perched on the roof of the wood shed. Mr. Anderson's gun was accidently discharged, killing the dog. Tubbits kept cool, and, holding the gun within six feet of the bear, shot it in the neck. With a howl the bear dropped from the shed and shun hled off into the forest. In the night was dark the men did not care to pursue the wounded animal. Its bloody tracks were seen the next day, and several men were soon searching in the forest for it.

Didn't Know Who it was.

The talk drifted from ships to boats, and an officer in the United States army attempted to relate the most modest looking man of the lot on rowing. He told him how to rig a boat, how to balance himself in a shell, and how to measure an oar. Mr. Frank Mayo, who was in charge of the stranger, became silent, then amused, and finally exclaimed: "For God's sake, captain, hold on! You don't know who you are talking to."

"Well, I did a little rowing when a boy and want to know something about boating," replied the captain, with a flush on his face.

"Well," said Mr. Mayo, "you are talking to Edward Hanlan."

The captain removed his hat, then extended his hand.

"Mr. Hanlan, I beg your pardon. I did not catch your name at first. If I had stuck to my trade and joined army I should not have made a fool of myself. What shall it be? Yellow label."

Railway Wages in British Columbia.

From the Victoria Evening Press the following list of wages on the Canada Pacific is taken: Laborers, average 125 per month, tick for men $3.50 to $4 per day, earth graders $2 50 to $3.50, bridge foreman $3.50 to $4.50, bridge carpenters, 1st class, $3.50, 2d do. $3, masons $2.50 to $3.50, stonecutters $3 to $3.50, blacksmiths, 1st class, $3.50 to $4, 2d do. $3, 1d smiths' helpers $1.50 to $2, drillers $2 to $2.50, laborers, $1.75 to $2, hewers, $2.50, chainmen $2 to $2.50, rodmen $2.50, of ten hours per day. The contractors leave it optional with the men to board with them or board themselves.

The Sun Turns Green in India.

A remarkable phenomenon has been observed lately at several places in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, and has caused much interest, mingled with not a little alarm among the superstitious. For some days the sun presented a distinctly green color. No satisfactory explanation has been forthcoming, of which the most plausible appears to be that offered by the Government Astronomer, that it is due to the passage across northern India of clouds of sulphurous vapor from the Java volcanoes.

A western prize envelope professing to give a valuable secret for 50 cents, is worth notice. One purchaser when he opened his treasure, found a sentence like the following: "Never purchase anything without first examining it. If you had done this, you would never have paid ten cents for an old envelope, when you could have got a dozen good ones for the same money." True as gospel. An unseen bargain is sure so be found a very visible loss in due time.

The Queen did nobody any wrong in giving her grandson the Garter the other day, as there are an unlimited number of extra knights among the various royal families, the ordinary knights being only twenty-four in number.

The Workman's Song.

BY CLARENCE A. PONSFORD.

I will write the songs of the workingman,
And I'll be the poet for one, I bet sure!
Yes, I belong to the brotherhood,
And I'll work and sing till the work be done.
Fill the world be finished, quick and sharp,
And rounded off in the honest shape,
Where honest toil and sweet content
Give Life and Time their great prop.

Then, comrades, come and sing with me,
To the one of the toilsome, weary days;
Brave and true are men with the axe of work
Till the whole world join in labor's praise.
With the hammer, trowel and shovel and sled,
And the steaming mine's whistle shrill,
Let the song of the workingman be heard
Till "the heavens and earth with the echoes fill."

To the plow, to the plane, in field or in shop,
Go we to the task with a merry song;
And the toil and sweat shall be all made sweet
To the heart and hand of the working throng,
And each week's hard work and hard earning
In God and Nature's righteous plan,
The world shall give all honor due
To the honest, upright workingman.

Who fills the ground with his own right hand,
And makes his bread with the night of brawn,
Shall awake from slumber's sweet repose,
Refreshed and blest by the morrow's dawn;
Who rings the axe and whirls the saw,
As rightly becometh the whole man,
Proclaims to the world in his timely way,
There is honor due to the workingman.

The manliest men on earth to-day
Are they who work and still rejoice;
Who with a brave heart and hand and eye
Do their duty, and hear the voice

HOME MATTERS.

Next Thursday is thanksgiving day.

Mr. H. Stickle moved to Norwood this week.

Mr. Jonas Caverly and family moved to Belleville yesterday (Thursday).

Milne & Clute and Parker & Butler expect to move into their new premises next week.

Mr. Jacob Acker has leased the Windsor house, Madoc, and took possession last week.

The new Scott house stables are well under way, and will be ready for use in a few days.

Mr. Geo. T. Hubble is building himself a fine brick house on his property on the Frankford road. The brickwork is completed.

The newly organized brass band of Marmora intend giving a concert in the town hall of that village on Wednesday evening, 14th inst. Proceeds in aid of their funds. No doubt "the boys" will be well patronized.

Remember the Beulah anniversary services on Sunday. Sermons at 10:30 by Rev. T. Brown (Bible Christian); 2:30 by Rev. E. N. Baker, of Madoc, and ? by Bishop Carman. At the tea on Monday the above and others will deliver addresses.

Quarterly meeting in the Stirling C. M. church and Sunday next, the sermon to be preached by Bishop Carman. There will be no service in the M. E. church in the morning, and in the evening both congregations will meet in the latter place, to listen to a sermon from Rev. R. Walker.

Mr. Walter Martin lately received an order for a pair of men's lace boots all the way from British Columbia. They are now ready for shipment (by parcel post, in two packages), and from their solid construction one would think they could travel considerably further than the Pacific without being worn out.

Wednesday night was "Hallowe'en," and the usual amount of levdtry was indulged in by the gamins. Their chief performance was upsetting the steps and platform at the front of St. Andrew's church, doing some damage. A dose of salt from a shotgun might teach such mischief makers a lesson some night.

Mr. Marshall Wescott started on Friday morning last for Fort Worth, Texas, to return some time next summer, when he will decide upon a further course. He was accompanied on the start by his wife and mother, who visit Rev. Mr. Rankin at King, north of Toronto, the former going on then to Collingwood to visit other friends; both ladies returning to Stirling in a few weeks.

The North Hastings uniform promotion examinations take place as follows: Promotion to fifth class and admission to high schools: At Stirling and Madoc, on December 20th and 21st, at 9 a. m. Promotion to fourth class: At West Huntingdon school house, Madoc village, Bent's school house (Madoc), Queensboro, Bridgewater, Stirling, Springbrook school house (Hawkins), and Marmora village, on December 20th and 21st, at 9 a. m. Promotion to junior and senior third class: In each school house on December 11th, at 9 a.m.

The Review of last week says: To-day and to-morrow (25th and 26th) the first ore under the new management will be put through the Canada Consolidated Gold Mining Co's works at Deloro. On Friday the new lessees, Messrs. Stevens, Newbury and Rothwell, will make a thorough personal examination of the whole works. We are informed that the prospects of this property never looked more encouraging. We hope the brightest anticipations of the new lessees may be more than realized. The mine will be in complete operation in two or three weeks.

The confirmation and consecration services announced were held in St. John's church yesterday (Thursday) by his lordship the bishop of Ontario. Eleven candidates were confirmed. The church was crowded, and the service was very impressive, the bishop delivering a sound, sensible, practical lecture to the candidates and to the church at large. We go to press too early to give a lengthy a notice as the occasion deserves. Among those present were Rev. Messrs. Godden, Harris and Leitch, Dr. Rossvally, and others. The bishop proceeded to St. Thomas' church, Ameliasburgh, in the afternoon, to consecrate the church and graveyard.

On the evening of the Oddfellows' concert, as Mr. Geo. H. Boyce was purchasing his tickets, he accidentally dropped a $5 bill, not missing it for some hours. Next morning a diligent search was made, but the missing note refused to appear, and was given up as a "goner." On Monday morning last Mr. Boyce had occasion to use his umbrella, and on opening it the lost bill fluttered out. The umbrella was not encased, and had been carelessly thrown around different places since the concert, and had stood, when not carried, in the entry of the photograph gallery, but fortunately had guarded well its treasure, to restore it in due time to its rightful owner.

The young men of Foxboro' and vicinity engaged in a day's sport hunting wild game of the forest last Friday. W. G. Simmons and Thos. Copland were chosen captains. Early in the morning the men and boys started out on their wild career, with ten on a side, each side determined to win and carry off the laurels. Each man was requested to adhere strictly to the game laws enacted by the Foxboro' hunt club. They all worked well, and returned in the evening, heavily laden. In John Crawford's hotel, where he had prepared a grand oyster supper for them J. Simmons, P. Hague and D. W. Faulkner were chosen judges, and by careful examination and count it resulted in Mr. Simmon's scoring about 1,500 and Mr. Copland 1,000, the losing side to pay for the tea, Mr. Everet Madden making the largest score. Tea was then prepared, and all sat down, with a number of others, to partake of the delicacies prepared, which were first class. The evening was spent in a sociable and agreeable manner, all returning home at an early hour, having enjoyed a good day's sport.

Dr. Rossvally.

The sermon on Sunday evening last, and the lectures Monday and Tuesday evening, by Dr. M. L. Rossvally, "the converted Jew," were all of the deepest interest and profit. The Dr. is a thorough Jew, and is brimful of his subject, showing a complete knowledge of the habits, religion, etc., of his race. On the platform were displayed a brilliant array of the paraphernalia of the Jewish worship, the uses of which were fully explained during the lectures. The audiences were addressed in a free, conversational style, being questioned at times, and accorded the privilege of asking any questions they might wish. They also had the privilege of examining the different articles exhibited, such as the Pentateuch written by a Jewish scribe on parchment in the Chaldaic language, and other rarities, which all seemed genuine, and the whole collection must have been of great value. The singing of the Dr. and his daughter formed a very attractive addition to the programme. His voice is a clear, deep bass, of much power and fine tone, while hers is quite out of a parallel, by charming nature, though alone it would scarcely be called sweet or musical. Another lecture will be delivered on Friday evening in the same place, on "The Jew," admission 10c., when the ceremony of the Jewish wedding will be performed. Those who have never heard Dr. Rossvally, no matter where they place their anticipations, will hear a better or different exposition than they expect. His style is easy and familiar, and his subjects are so entirely new and original that any one will be at once interested and profited.

Since the above was put in type, and just as we go to press, we are shown a copy of the Christian Guardian of Oct. 31st, which contains entire a letter from the New York Christian Advocate of Aug. 2nd, and also a shorter letter from A. Browning, of Campbellford, both of which contain statements very damaging to the reputation and veracity of Dr. Rossvally—in fact, proclaiming him a fraud of the worst type. Whether these be true or not the writers should know, and, while deeply pained to find such well supported charges against one who evidently has great scope for usefulness, yet imperative duty as a public journalist compels us to render this a matter. It will be remembered that the Dr. referred to certain "persecutions" in his Sunday evening sermon, which no doubt are the charges in the letters mentioned, and which are too lengthy to produce here at so late an hour. While sincerely trusting that he will be able to clear himself of the serious charges, yet as a plain duty to many readers this latter paragraph is published.

STILL LATER—Dr. Rossvally has called at the last moment and requested insertion of the following:

"In reference to the matters referred to above, I respectfully ask a generous public to withhold judgment in the premises until they have opportunity to hear me on Friday evening, or see proceedings of court when published, which they will be, Rev. Mr. Browning's statement to the contrary notwithstanding. Proceedings are to be entered against my traducers. I will explain all on Friday evening, when it will be fully understood. I have telegraphed to Bishop Carman in regard to the matter, who has replied, and we will meet this week.

"M. L. ROSSVALLY."

Railway Smash-up.

On Saturday morning last, as the Madoc passenger train was proceeding to Belleville, it collided with a gravel train which was going up empty. The ballast train was just slacking up to enter the siding at the gravel-pit below the junction, when the other train hove in sight around the curve. The train men saw the danger too late to avert it, and jumped for their lives, some being severely injured, others escaping unhurt. The trains met, with terrific force, the two engines being seriously injured, nearly all the ballast cars smashed, and ruin and wreck distributed generally. The passenger car swung on its hind trucks, throwing the passengers backward, then settled down suddenly with a crash. The personal injuries are as follows: John Taylor, brakeman, of Belleville, sustained a fracture of the right hip, and was otherwise hurt; Hiram Phillips, of Eldorado, had his head badly cut, one of his hips was injured, and two ribs fractured; and Mrs. Wright, of Madoc, was badly injured about the back. Mrs. Wright at last accounts was scarcely expected to recover. Nearly all the other passengers were severely shaken up, one being thrown through a window, and a knife penetrating the hand of another. Dr. Faulkner, of Foxboro', and Dr. Burdett, of Belleville, were at once sent for, and took care of the sufferers, who were taken to Belleville with the rest of the passengers on a relief train. The damage to the cars and engines is variously estimated at from $10,000 to $20,000. By night the track was cleared, so that trains were running as usual. The appearance of the two engines showed that they must have met with terrible force, the cowcatchers being torn off, headlights shattered, and the machinery generally wrenched and twisted. The only wonder is that lives were not lost, or at least more bodily injury done. The wrecked cars were said to have been piled twenty feet high.

The Ontario of Monday gives the following as to the cause of the accident: It is stated that conductor Snider of the Peterborough train, neglected to sign the words "red signal" on the order which he left at the junction for the inspection of conductor Carr of the Madoc passenger train, signifying that a train followed Snider out. The latter carried a red flag as far as the gravel pit where the ballast train was supposed to stop, but it was then taken in. It is said had the Madoc train been a few seconds later, the ballast train would have been out of danger on the siding running into the pit. The two injured passengers were taken home Saturday night. They are doing well.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENT WORKS.

To the Ed tor of The News-Argus.

There is abundant evidence of thought everywhere directed to progress in every branch of industry, and that this age is not advancing majestically to the cry only of those benighted, thick-pated ones who are not contemplative or seek not for its manifold evidences. That such should be the case, and that communities should possess those so callous to this go-a-head spirit, is most lamentable; and that one community should, considering the stimulus, unity and zeal exercised in communities similar and adjacent, in the face of these facts, be outvied in the struggle for equality, if not better supremacy, is evidence of a spirit foreign to material progress, and reminus one forcibly that there exists a motley community whose aims are not mutual. Well, with this preliminary outburst, let us, as a citizen, take under consideration, not as we are in any way concerned with the workings of the establishment under observation, or expect to deal with or profit by it, the subject of this article—agricultural implement works. Is it too large for contemplation? too large for us rustic villagers? No. The plan of setting on foot such an undertaking is to ascertain whether there are some fifteen or twenty men in this village and vicinity who will each subscribe from $500 to $1,000, and then induce the co-operation of some leading manufacturer. In speaking to a gentleman, since the commencement of writing this article, I was assured by him that he would give one acre of land adjoining the railway for such buildings. I am satisfied that some of our citizens, and especially well-to-do farmers, could not invest their funds in a better industry in point of obtaining good returns, and the upbuilding of an enterprise so needed and essential. Belleville, after much clamouring, has succeeded in having established "stove works," controlled by a joint stock company, and it becomes us as a people to unite in encouraging and devising means to make our village prosperous. Dr. Johnson, the lexicographer, who took pleasure in ridiculing Scotchmen, in his definition of oats says "they constitute the food of horses and Scotchmen." The canny Scot, seeing this, said "Where will you find finer horses and better men?" So, in Stirling, where will you find better men, more energetic, more zealous? But where will you find less concentration of undivided union to push forward the place to a higher social and mercantile position?

FARMER.

A WRONG OPINION.

Many a dollar is paid for prescriptions for some disease that never troubled the patient, and when the sole difficulty was worms, which a few of Freeman's Worm Powders would remove. These powders are pleasant, safe, and sure, contain their own cathartic, and are adapted for children and adults.

Mr. McGregor, of Norwood, having occasion to go to Belleville, drove to Hastings and left his horse at the Coughlin house. On his return in the evening he discovered that the tail of the animal had been "clipped."

A WONDERFUL RESULT.

A single bottle of Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup has frequently destroyed from 100 to 200 worms. It is pleasant to take—no other cathartic being required. Tape worms have also been removed by it, of 15 to 35 feet in length. It is effectual for all varieties of worms afflicting both children and adults.

WARNER'S SAFE CURE

FOR THE

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—whatever it may be. The medical profession, authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be restored. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters; imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

REGENERATION.

Sermon preached in Marmora Methodist Church by Rev. A. Wilson, and reported for "The News-Argus."

TEXT, John, III, 3—Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God.

In these times, when men are widening the way to the Eternal city, and trying to broaden out the conditions on which God proposed to save men, a clear understanding of a text so marked and distinct as the one before us is of the utmost importance to us all. Some men find fault with all ministers because they impeach them with being too particular and rigid in their expositions of God's word, and in order to appear generous and liberal, they throw open the gates of eternal life to all characters and creeds, protesting that all may enter; but Jesus Christ has written with his own fingers on this subject, and has left it on no wise. The text narrows the way of life down to the very finest point, and yet leaves it in no doubt as to the right issue or inquiring one can mistake it. There is no uncertainty about this. It fixes a standard so high that no human being has any authority to lower it. The conditions are fixed and unalterable as the character of God Himself. A man may possess many excellencies of character, engaging manners, a kind heart, a becoming reverence for sacred things, a willingness to be right, yea, he may be religious to a degree, and yet not be born again. You may flatter yourself that your prospects for future happiness are good, nevertheless the text says: "Verily, verily, except ye be born again." Except I am born again I can in no wise enter the kingdom. Now we shall briefly try to examine the conditions of the text, and how far we have fulfilled them. The expression "born again" is not one unknown to the sacred Bible. Jesus Christ talked about it to one of the first time in conversing with Nicodemus, or one with which he was unacquainted. They we might wish winter to stay away, still the yellow leaves in our forest plainly prove that come it will. Outside of human agency and power there is intelligent, unbending law, the result of certain fixed causes governed by the great I Am, Himself. Now, I ask you, if God is exact to the very last letter in all these things, do you suppose that He will deal carelessly or fitfully with human characters, and permit the depraved and the unregenerate to enter that place of happiness, when our text affirms "no, in no wise," and all Holy Scripture from their snow-white thrones each cry: "no, no, nothing that is impure, nor defiled, nor worketh abomination, nor maketh a lie, shall enter"? You may plant the savage and the civilized, the educated and the ignorant, together, house amongst house and family amongst family, but for all that there is a social law by which they will separate as surely as night is separate from day. Men may deny that they never could have loved, understand why they were left behind in the social rank, whilst others advanced, the secret is that they were not in the social rank to which they aspired. There is no hope of eternal life for you unless you are born again. Reverently lay your prayers, when you come to-night, and other points will present themselves for examination which our brief service will not permit us to dwell on. Now, I think such are the fair, logical conditions of our text that the Son of God laid down before Nicodemus, and before every member of this congregation, and before all the world. The question arises: How far have we fulfilled these conditions? Some do not, well-nourished, think that they have fulfilled the demands of the text, or at least one of the leading demands, which, left in the arbitrament of a decided other, they were presented before some servant of God, and received from his hands the rite of baptism, and that the water which fell sparkling on the brow of childhood indicated a deeper and more important baptism of the soul with power from on high. Sometimes, well on in the darkness of the night, I have cheerfully, so far as duty was concerned, hastened to baptize a dying infant for a weeping mother; but whilst it is our failing for each of us to magnify our office, I have never thought to this hour that I had ever any power to regenerate or convey the grace of regeneration to the infant subject, and if any other one has, I would say, like those of whom we read in the Acts of the Apostles, when the brethren told them of what wonders God wrought by their hands: Let us praise God, who has given such power unto men." The prophet, as he devoted another and pious father, mingling with those of some earnest servant of God, may secure some spiritual help for the child, but regeneration, very, because if so then all children are regenerated, and all those who die without that rite are lost, because "no, in no wise," an idea from which the best feelings of our nature revolt. I think the children who die in infancy subject are as much among the lambs of the upper fold to-night as those who have had all the advantages of the church. But I know I am on dangerous ground, and I would say, I am not the first not of devotedness for their child in the Jewish church, that their child should be cut off out of Israel, or they should forfeit the perpetuation of their family descent by this heathen act, but I say in no wise that the child should be cut off out of the family of God, because in the passage before us there was no doubt whatever but Nicodemus was very few, which would be one, or at least a very strange expression if so much an extremely strange expression if so much related upon the act. Then, again, in another place in the Acts, when, through the ministrations of the word by some of the disciples, people were converted, and baptized unto or in the name of Jesus, Peter and John came down from Jerusalem, kneeling down prayed, and they were filled with the Holy Ghost; and, before one can be regenerated without this power from above, Ananias and Saphira and Simon were baptized, and yet the positive teaching of scripture in the regard to these persons clearly proved that they were not regenerated, and do also the lives of hundreds of thousands in our own day who are leading sinful lives, while in infancy the parental affection of Godly parents carried them to God's house and had this rite performed for them. I think that it is a positive duty, which Christian parents ought to perform for their children, and take on their own behalf a covenant with God that their best efforts shall be put forth to train them up for Christ, and I think that childhood is the time when it should be performed. But don't rest, my hearers, on the fact that you were baptized, no matter by what priestly hand administered or at what God consecrated. No, in no wise, ye be born again. But, once more, some points in connection with this change have caused a good deal of discussion. Some suppose it is a gradual transformation or change from the sinful to the pure, from the natural to the spiritual, just like the dawn breaking over the mountain tops, gradually lifting the darkness from the valleys below. It may be, but the danger lies in our trying to improve our character and build up a character manhood slowly and by degrees, so but on this side of the grave with trembling hands and fevered brow and tottering steps pile them up, let them moment the world where you crossed, but the boatman refuses to row them over. Let your mirth be the loudest, and drink every cup of pleasure, but for all that remember that the next life is real and practical, and few worldlings indulge in mirthfulness when called to meet death. Men are exact in business; our criminal laws are exact; our weights and measures are exact standards. If you intended to weigh a pound or measure a yard, but were deficient in both, your fellow-citizens would not make up the deficiency or save you from censure. And God is exact. See how exact; He has constructed every bone and muscle, every fibre and cell in the human body. What delicate combinations of leaves and colors are visible everywhere in the vegetable world! See how He has created just the exact kind of food for all kind of living things throughout His realm. Search as you will throughout His vast realms, and you can find nowhere anything carelessly constructed or heedlessly placed. All that we know of God from natural things plainly proves that He is exact. Again, history proves that in His providence He winds with the world He is exact. Now, a prayer, many a hope, many a wish, followed Benjamin Franklin and his party when they started off to invade the iron king in his palace, if possible to set scientific doubt at rest, and on and on speed his vessel; now, partly covers a hundred the water, brandishing its glittering spears, but still on he elbows his way; the ice grows stronger, the winds colder, and the moan of perpetual winter smites on their ears, and no tongue can picture the suffering, the privations, of that hapless band. Why make some people and let their friends hear from their life the strange stories of that frigid zone? But no, God's laws are exact, and the same become God's laws are exact, and the same become their wailing-sheet. All the world appeared to have been desirous that president Garfield might live; the best medical aid the union could procure was with him; but the disease steadily gained, and amid the tears of a sorrowing continent he died. Though we might wish winter to stay away, still the yellow leaves in our forest plainly prove that come it will. Outside of human agency and power there is intelligent, unbending law, the result of certain fixed causes governed by the great I Am, Himself. Now, I ask you, if God is exact to the very last letter in all these things, do you suppose that He will deal carelessly or fitfully with human characters, and permit the depraved and the unregenerate to enter that place of happiness, when our text affirms "no, in no wise," and all Holy Scripture from their snow-white thrones each cry: "no, no, nothing that is impure, nor defiled, nor worketh abomination, nor maketh a lie, shall enter"? Some suppose it is a gradual transformation or change from the sinful to the pure, from the natural to the spiritual, just like the dawn breaking over the mountain tops, gradually lifting the darkness from the valleys below. It may be, but the danger lies in our trying to improve our character and build up a character manhood slowly and by degrees, so slowly indeed that human life may not be long enough to see it accomplished; coming Christ so slowly that our strength fails us, and in the dimness of old age we fall to find Him; while some speak of feelings and distress, anguish of soul, or of a sudden bound out of self into Christ, out of darkness into light. All these points may have some truth in them, and may be the honest convictions of honest men, but the best form is itself, for in last we agree, but in what relation we stand ourselves. Is there any religious change whatever wrought in our hearts? Are we struggling after any change, or have we fixed any point in the future when we intend to make this change. I would not be acting the part of a faithful pastor if I were not to urge these points upon you. You have seen men and women in your acquaintance changed, the whole current of their lives turned, the dishonest becoming upright, the immoral becoming pure, the habitually profane giving up their evil ways, the unchaste becoming holy, the untruthful speaking that which was right, the unsteady and the drunkard cured; you have seen vast changes pass over some whom you have known, or do know, just as it was in the days of Christ, the demoniacs clothed and in their right mind at the feet of Jesus. How do you account for all this? It was no fabled power that bended the marvellous transformation. Prisons, reformatories, penitentiaries have a tendency to keep the evil disposed from perpetrating crimes, but this right is something beyond their power. It is nothing else but the power of God. Seek it to-night.

BAD DRAINAGE.

There is nothing more productive of disease in a neighborhood than bad drainage. Open the culverts and sluiceways and purify the locality. The obstructions in the human system may be remedied in a similar manner by Burdock Blood Bitters, which opens all the outlets of disease through the Bowels, Bowels, Liver and Kidneys.

Mr. Robt. Kingston has traded his grist mill at Newcomb's Mills, in the township of Brighton, for a grist-mill at Wooller, township of Murray, and has removed to the latter place.

A Word to the Wise.

As long as natural causes or imprudence lead to physical suffering, so long will the healing art maintain primary importance, and engage the attention of scientific minds. The study of medicine no longer consists in acquiring the art of compounding drugs, or prescribing a heterogeneous mass of ingredients, the properties of which the uninitiated are carefully kept in ignorance of. As knowledge advances common sense and reason are usurping the place of blind faith in conventional creeds and theories. The world has long since scouted the theory put into practice by the medical profession in Spain in a past age, that letting blood from the heels was an infallible panacea for all diseases. It is no longer a settled belief that ignorance of the many is necessary to enable the initiated few to administer to mankind those benefits which a wise Providence has bountifully dispensed for all who seek them where they may be found. The man, therefore, who, escaping from countenances, makes the gifts of God available to all, is a public benefactor. Such a man is Professor Holloway. He started with the principle, which is Divine in origin, that "Blood is life," and keeping it in view, has devoted a whole life to secure its recognition by the common sense of mankind. How he has succeeded, the living world is prepared to testify. With simple ingredients he has prepared remedies for internal and external maladies, the most serious and complicated, and guarantees their efficacy on the sole condition that they who try them will strictly follow his directions. He makes no secret of his art, and asks no faith which proof will not deserve. He tells us what our reason accepts, that while the blood is impure health is impossible; points to the countless diseases which are the result of its impurity, and demonstrates that they are merely removed, health returns. He has refuted the assertion that outward applications of his Ointment cannot affect an internal complaint, by proof more satisfying our reason than the Ointment, by being rubbed upon any part of the body, will be imbibed and introduced into the blood by means of circulating fluids, in like manner as salt is forced into meat, however hard its texture, and penetrated throughout its substance. That this is true, is evidenced by the cures without number of gout, rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, Ec-doloreux, enlargement of the glands, paralysis, knotted veins of the legs, diseases of the hip and other joints, which his drastic remedies have effected. Evidence so overwhelming has to quote the words of a contemporary, resulted in this, "the world, at variance on all other points, is here alone united and unanimous that Thomas Holloway is the supreme physician of humanity, and that his Pills and Ointment embrace and have dominion over all forms of external and internal maladies whatever."—Australian Echo.

A GOOD INTRODUCTION.

J. Kennedy, a merchant in Dixie, about three years ago introduced Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam to his customers by trying it in his own family for Coughs and Colds. Being pleased with results, large sales followed, and it is now the favorite remedy in that neighborhood.

ANOTHER WITNESS.

A. Chard, of Stirling, testifies to the efficacy of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which he used for a badly injured knee joint. It is the great household remedy for inflammation, pain, soreness, lameness, etc., and is used both internally and externally with infallible success.

A WRONG OPINION.

Many a dollar's worth of Worm Powders have been sold that never troubled the patient; and when the sole difficulty was worms, which a few of Freeman's Worm Powders would remove. These powders are pleasant, safe, and sure, contain their own cathartic, and are adapted for children and adults.

A WONDERFUL RESULT.

A single bottle of Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup has frequently destroyed from 100 to 200 worms. It is pleasant to take—no other cathartic being required. Tape worms have also been removed by it, of 15 to 35 feet in length. It is effectual for all varieties of worms afflicting both children and adults.

A MADMAN AT THE THROTTLE.

An Engine Travellor at a Fearful Speed.

An engine on the Pennsylvania rail road passed Latrobe recently at a frightful rate of speed. The operator in the signal station near by heard the rumble of approaching wheels and looked up the track in surprise. Like a flash the engine passed the signal station. The operator's eye caught for an instant the figure of a man standing at the throttle with blood streaming from his face. That was all. Then the engine disappeared in a cloud of dust.

An extra freight train coming west was not far from Derry station when it met with an accident. Derry is forty miles east of Pittsburg. The trainwas a heavy one. In addition to the regular drawing engine there was a pushing engineer behind, to help over the drawhead of the forward car gave away, and sprang ahead for a few feet, when it was stopped. A brakeman should have been sent to the rear to notify the engineer of the pushing engine of the accident, but it seems that this act of caution was omitted. Switchman John Bley and fireman James Maloney went to repair damages. Bley crawled under the front platform of the disabled car and Maloney was resting on one knee at the bull-nose of the coupling when the train started. In an instant Bley's body was being rolled over and over under the platform; he tried to jump to his feet, but was too late. He was pushed along by the platform and was caught between the car and the forward engine, which was standing in the track where the engine had stopped it. As soon as the train could be stopped the train men and engineer went to the assistance of the injured man. Maloney was shrieking with pain. He was speedily extracted and was suffering the most frightful agony. Terrible as the train men lifted the injured fireman from the ground and carried him to the engine. They placed him upon his back in the cab and went for switchman Bley. He was beyond all help. When his mangled and bleeding body was pulled from beneath the car life was extinct.

While the trainmen were standing about the remains in the cab of the engine. In spite of his terrible injuries and the great loss of blood fireman Maloney's strength was not exhausted. His terrible suffering had turned his brain. Delirium had seized him. Jumping to his feet he danced about and uttered such wild, frightful shrieks as only madmen can utter. There was no one there to control him. It would have been dangerous to have attempted it. He was at home on the engine. With the blood streaming from his gaping wounds the raving maniac seized the throttle and pulled the valve wide open. The engine jumped away in an instant and started on a grade at a frightful velocity. It was all done in an instant. Fortunately the track was clear and the madman had no chance to hinder him in his head-long race. The six miles to Latrobe were passed over in a twinkling (here the maniac's strength apparently failed my way. Before he fell to the floor unconscious he seized the throttle and turned it the other way. Perhaps it was done in falling. At all events, when the engine had reached the bottom of the grade, a mile further on, it came to a stand. There a party of trainmen found it, and on the floor of the cab they found the body of Maloney lying in a pool of blood. The body was taken to the office of a physician, who dressed the wounds temporarily and pronounced them fatal.

How to Propose.

St. Louis letter: "How shall a man propose in order to be successful in his suit, repeated one of the most intelligent society ladies, whose silver locks only serve to enhance the beauty of her still youthful face. "In my opinion, though all know well enough how to make love, there is not one in a thousand who knows how to propose. My husband spent six months in protesting and convincing me of his love, of which, by the way, I was well aware from the first. 'Will you marry me?' and then he waited for an answer, with a disheartened air: 'You are like all the rest, a perfect enigma. I have spent months trying to win you, and I do not know that I have made any impression upon you; you are as hard to unravel as the scarf you wear around your throat.' This, I exclaimed, in the most pathetic way, 'why, 'tis so difficult task to unravel it, if you only get hold of the right string.' He saw the point, took hold of the right string, and—what "His arm took the place of the scarf?" "Well, neither of us has ever regretted it." A bright-eyed girl, who is a skillful angler for hearts, thinks a young man will be successful should propose after a very short acquaintance, take the girl by storm; as it were and she is pleased with a new beau, and before she has time to tire of him; then follow the proposal up with a vigorous courtship, lots of flowers and bon-bons, drives, theatres, parties, etc., and if she consents, insist upon a short engagement by all means. Another well known belle and beauty, who has created sad havoc and had much experience in this line, says, the only successful way is to propose when least expected. Allow no time for consideration, and, when you insist that the acceptance must be "now or never," She feels sure that is the only way that she will ever be captured, but she thinks very few men are bold enough to try that game. A handsome young widow, well known in social circles, who is not so rich as she was, says that the only successful way to win her is to offer a fine horse, horse and carriage, with plenty of money to keep them in style.

A dark-eyed girl, with a tangle of soft brown hair shading her brow, says: "If a fellow is desperately in love with a girl and persistent in his efforts to win her, he is sure to gain his suit. Widowers understand this point, and know how to make love and propose, and you will observe they are always successful. She knows one case where a widower went in and hung up his hat, announcing his intention of staying until he was accepted, and the girl had to marry him, to get rid of him. A widower beau makes her nervous about the result.

One sweet, dreamy-eyed girl, who is just on the threshold of society, says: "Love-making must be so sweet that she would wish her lover to be a long time making the approaches, and she would not shorten the delights of an engagement by marrying each other it would be better before than after marriage. She is not particular as to his style, but he must be tall and handsome, and sing and dance well, and above all, he must know how to to make love." This girl's name must be kept secret.

A married lady, in whose household the little god of love certainly makes his abode, says the only successful proposition of which she knows anything was made when a friend being spoken: "John and I sat looking in the fire a long time without saying anything, when all at once he put his arm around me, drew me to him, and kissed me. When father came in a moment later, he said: 'Major, I'm going to steal your daughter.'"

"The quickest courtship on record," said one old resident, "was that of Dr. Nick McDowell who, driving along the street in a foggy one day, saw a beautiful girl standing at a window. He immediately stopped and hitched his horse, rang the bell, inquired the lady's name, was ushered into the parlor, announced his errand, and said he was pleased with her appearance and wished to marry her at once. Nothing but the knowledge that she was actually in the presence of the celebrated physician kept her from fainting. To her plea of surprise at this unexpected announcement, she replied: 'Now or never.' When she asked to take a week to consider, he said: 'I am going down street to attend a critical case, and have no time to spare right now.'

"Give me a day, then."

"I'll tell you what I'll do. When I am through with this professional visit, I'll drive around and get a preacher; if you've made up your mind to marry me by that time, all right," and he left her, breathless, and unable to articulate another word. When he returned they were quietly married. "No cards."

The Tourist in Canada.

A correspondent of the Chicago Standard says:—

To see the Old World you must go to the Maritime Provinces and some other parts of the Dominion of Canada. Only in Canada can you see old France. You will see French in France to-day. In Canada the old forms of speech, old methods of dress and manners of life are preserved. The same is true of the Scotch in Cape Breton and other parts of the country. There are fewer people in Scotland, even in the most Northern Highlands, in proportion to the population, who speak only Gaelic than in Cape Breton. On that island which the Canadians have found who speak little English, many of them none whatever. The same is true of sections of the Province of Quebec that the writer of birthplace. It is natural that when persons leave their native land they should carry their customs with them—very strict of patriotism, often of religion also, leads them to cling tenaciously to these customs. The countries whence they came feel the atmosphere of the nineteenth century far more than the quiet corners in which the immigrants have located. Half a mile from English to day than any city in England.

The sturdy Briton has pushed the dashing Frenchman out of all the prominent parts of continent. The Frenchman, however, has left the halo of brave deeds, and the romance of poetical and historical names on every spot where he has touched. Mr. Warner, in his deeply interesting book, entitled, Backlock and that Sort of Thing," has recorded that to the French and Spanish we are indebted for the poetry, the romance of our early history. The Spanish was not much, but he "meant business." We are glad, nevertheless, for the glamour of the French-man's poetry. In the Maritime Provinces, strictly speaking, there are but few French-men left. In the Province of Quebec they abound. In the provinces below they are found only in limited settlements. Most never found they retain the language and customs of their ancestors. Their language is not the miserable patois which some speak. School-girls who can barely translate their exercises may so describe it; but those who have studied the art of speaking know better. One hears in Canada the French as spoken in France two hundred years ago. It is still spoken with remarkable purity. It bears to modern French the relation which the English of Shakespeare bears to the English of to-day. One constantly hears in Canada expressions which the French of France, at least French dramatists. There are of course, expressions which have come from association with the Indians; there are Anglicisms; there are local expressions due to trade and the exigencies of life. These we have in English also. It is now admitted that most of our "Down-East-isms" were brought from England. They, too, can be traced to the leading writers of an earlier day. Precisely so with the French in Canada. This I affirm: There is better French spoken in Canada to-day as a whole than is spoken in France to day as a whole. There is worse French spoken in France to-day than is spoken in Canada to-day. There is far more of a patois in France than in Canada. No doubt in a limited section in France a better French is spoken than in Canada, but taking the country as a whole, the statement already made will not be contradicted by anyone whose judgment is worthy of consideration. It is a pity a student of French to visit Canada.

Strange Companions.

William Brickerhoff is the owner of an aquarium. At one time it was well stocked with gold fish, which, through the neglect of a careless servant, became reduced this summer to a single survivor. This one has been the subject of the most jealous care on the part of Mr. Brinckerhoff, who has objected strenuously to the introduction into his household in July last of a large maltese cat, the pet of his younger daughter, Beatrice.

The child, however, overruled her father's objections and secured a berth for her pet, promising to guard the gold fish from its attentions. That she had not kept this engagement was yesterday proved to her father as he entered the little parlor of his residence and found the cat fast asleep near where the goldfish in the globe, for which grimalkin was evidently preparing to make a fleshing excursion. For this purpose, apparently, it taped up in a chair at the side of the glass. The fish showed signs of consciousness of the cat's approach, but so fear. On the contrary, it rubbed its nose against the glass and splashed its tail in the water, as if to attract the cat's attention. The goldfish came to the surface blowing in a manner which Mr. Brinckerhoff characterizes as impatient.

Upon this the cat, raising itself on the edge of the bowl, reached over a paw. The goldfish swam gently directly under it, when the cat softly stroked its back, purring meanwhile with great contentment. The fish, however, seemed still impatient, and, darting away from its strange companion, swam rapidly about the bowl and then sought bottom. The cat remained in its position as if puzzled.

Shortly afterward the fish came to the surface again and snapped at a fly which was crossing the water, and, rested after having done so on the edge of the bowl. The cat, seeming to appreciate the situation, with a single swift movement caught the fly and dropped it into the mouth of its funny friend. The latter then submitted contentedly to the back-scratching and endearments which it had before resented. Mr. Brinckerhoff ascertained from his little girl that the companionship had existed for some weeks, but she had feared to tell of it, as her negligence had allowed its formation.

Prayer and Breakfast.

Some years ago, when the country around Cincinnati was newer than it now is, a pious farmer was busy one morning clearing his land. He had a number of hands employed, and was anxious to accomplish a large amount of work while the weather was favorable. He called them early, and went out with them before breakfast was ready. A horn was blown, and they came in and ate and returned again to their work.

The farmer had been accustomed to have prayers every morning in his family. But to keep all hands busy, many men chopping and log rolling while he read and prayed was more than he could afford; so Satan suggested and the good man yielded. His pious wife saw with grief that the family altar was neglected; but her husband in haste to get rich, was departing from God. She talked with him; she pleaded with him, but it seemed as if Satan had determined to try another experiment.

The next morning the farmer and his men went out, as usual, to their work. The sun began to climb up the sky, but no breakfast horn was heard. The men grew hungry, and looked anxiously toward the house; they listened, but still the expected summons did not come. After waiting an hour or two beyond the usual time they went into the house. No table was spread, no coffee was boiling on the fire, no good cook over or beside it. The good wife was knitting quietly, with the Bible on her lap.

"What does this mean?" cried the husband: "why isn't our breakfast ready?"

"I thought you were in such a hurry about your work that you would not have time to eat it."

"Have time to eat it! Do you think we can live without eating?"

"You can live without eating as well as without prayer. The Bible says, 'The good bread of heaven as much as the body needs the bread of earth.'"

"Well, well," said the farmer, "get us some breakfast, and we will have prayers again every morning, no matter how busy we are, or how many workmen I have."

She got the breakfast, and he kept his word. The lesson was a good one and was never forgotten.—Sabbath-school Recorder.

THE HAYTIAN TROUBLE.

British War Steamers on the Way to Hayti.

Recent Massacres at Port Au Prince.

A report has reached St. Thomas that the Haytian Government recently captured a vessel, supposed to be an American craft, which was trying to force the blockade. She was brought to be loaded with ammunition. On the 6th inst. five British war steamers from Barbadoes passed St. Thomas in the direction of Hayti to convey to her circumstances of the recent firing upon the steamer "Alpa."

Order has been completely restored to Port au Prince. Fifteen hundred lives were lost, and damage to the extent of $4,000,000 was done during the recent massacre. The diplomatic and consular corps, fearing a repetition of the scenes of the 22nd ult. should the insurgent steamer "Elder" land, have agreed to take charge of her if she should come to Port au Prince. On the 3rd inst. the Haytian war steamer "Dessalines" arrived at Port au Prince under the American flag and after approaching the Haytian. The Government is trying to raise there the balance due on the steamer. On the 20th ult. the Government forces attacked Wragnane and were repulsed with severe loss. Generalissimo Pigiant was mortally wounded.

OUTRAGES IN PORT AU PRINCE.

A correspondent at Port au Prince sends the following:—"On Saturday, the 22nd, at 11 a. m., a cry was heard, and people began to fire in the. It was then discovered that the general of the arrondissement, Penor, was shot. Five minutes afterward fire was put to all the inflammable materials near. Many of the fire-proof buildings stood the fire. When that was discovered the rabble resorted to digging out the doors, windows and walls, and thus prevented the spreading fire to the Port au Prince may well be said to be in ashes. The greatest consternation prevailed. Bunting of all nationalities was immediately hoisted at the several consulates and private houses. The fire lasted until Monday morning the 24th. The English, French, and Spanish war ships, very fortunately for the foreigners, were in port, and the men of the respective ships were landed. Thanks to the determined steps of the representatives of those nations their efforts resulted in somewhat establishing order. A great many foreigners were roughly handled, and in many cases shot. A few English-men and one Cuban were brutally shot and severely wounded. The country was entirely given up, it is said, by the President for pillage and arson. The secretary of the United States legation, Mr. Eugenes V. Garrido, charged by the Vice-Consul-General, Dr. John B. Terres, to procure a flag for his protection, left the legation for that purpose. While returning, enveloped in the Stars and Stripes, and when not over one hundred yards from the consulate, he was shot at by some thirty or more men who were stationed at his door. The secretary was forced to retreat to a friend's residence close by, when a bullet came pretty near carrying away both. When he could manage to get out he found his residence reduced to ashes, and all he possessed gone. On Sunday at about 2 p.m. the unfortunate secretary was at the door of the legation receiving the poor fugitives, whose lives were burnt out, an act entirely charitable and humane, when he was menaced and roughly handled by a mob who used bayonets and cutlasses."

Plain Diet.

The diet of children cannot be too plain. If they require to be encouraged to eat by the administration of dainties, they should be something radically wrong somewhere. It is unlikely that that something is constitutional, more probably insufficient exercise is taken at the wrong time, or the nursery is stuffy, or the bedroom badly ventilated, or the parents have forgotten that sunshine and fresh air are essentially the food for healthy life of a child as wholesome food itself. The want of cleanliness, or frequent use of the bath, is many times the cause of indifferent appetite in children. Without cleanliness of clothes and person you cannot rear healthy children. Without this the young blood seems poisoned, the child has neither buoyancy nor heart, appetite is depraved and fastidious, the face grows so pale and slim as a sickly plant. Injudicious clothing is another cause of dyspepsia. It is bad enough to encase the body which has undergone little development in a tight dress, but it is ruinous for a child to be clothed in tightly fitting garments. Every organ of a child's body requires room to grow and develop. If it be so tightly compressed, the circulation through it is lessened, and it is therefore sickly and weak. Children should be fed with unvarying regularity. The parents, having chosen the hours for their meals, ought then to see that the times are strictly adhered to. Irregularity in meal hours, and times of getting up in the morning and going to bed at night, is not only prejudicial to the present health of the child, but it teaches him habits which are greatly against his interest or happiness in after life. I need hardly speak here of the quality of the food that is placed before a child; against indigestible or rich food, against sauces and pastry of all kinds, indulgence in which is a great cause of the pancake, dough and dumpling kind, against unripe fruits, against very hot soup, against strong tea or coffee, or beer, or spirituous and malt meat. Pray, mothers, do not forget that an interval of rest should ensue between the meals you give your children, and do not ruin their stomachs by constantly stuffing them with cake, or buns, or any kind of sweets. To do so is worse than cruel, it is a sin, and a sin which you are but little likely to commit if you truly love them, and wish to see them grow into healthy men and women. Tarts and confectionery are bad for children, in all conscience, for children, even if they were always pure and unadulterated. But they are often positively poisonous. Feed your children with plain food, and keep them from day to day, permitting no stuffing between meals, and not forgetting the benefits that accrue from frequent changes of air, and from exercise as regards dinner. Do this, and your children will live to bless you.

Two Questions and a Reply.

"Have you got quail on toast?" asked a seedy looking party as he entered a Market street restaurant the other day.

"Have you got an eagle on silver?" asked the proprietor.

And the conference adjourned sine die. —San Francisco Post.

The English Parliament prohibited matrimonial and baby insurance in 1612, under penalty of £500 fine. It would be well to revive and enforce the law.

Jack Moore, of Union City, Ky., was bitten by a mad dog. He went to Mr. Burgen, who owns a madstone, to have it applied. A correspondent of the Cincinnati News-Journal says: "It stuck three times. After each application it was boiled in fresh sweet milk, to which it gave a greenish tinge. The fourth time it would not stick, and the patient was pronounced cured. Mr. Moore is convinced of the efficacy of the cure."

Cut off his Revenue.

An old gentleman was sitting in a lawyer's office in this city the other day when a messenger boy came in and handed him a telegram. The old man put on his spectacles and spelled the telegram out with considerable trouble. When its full meaning seemed to flash on him, he sat for a moment as though dazed and then, laying his head on the table in front of him, groaned audibly. The only other person in the room was a pale-faced man with a bandage over one eye, who, like the old man, was waiting to have an interview with the lawyer. Thinking that the telegram must have conveyed news of some family bereavement, he approached the old man and asked sympathetically:

"Bad news?"

"Yes," said the old man, wiping his eyes with a big bandanna, "tremendous bad."

"Yes; my gal—" The old man's voice broke down, and burying his face in his handkerchief he wept aloud.

The pale-faced man seemed much touched by this display of grief. "It is sad," said he, "when a loved daughter, the stay and comfort of your declining years—"

"So she was," broke in the old man.

"Is suddenly called away to that shadowy—"

"She weren't called," interrupted the old man, looking up, "she just went off herself. Ain't I telling you I'm sad?"

"I mean," said the pale-faced man, "when a daughter dies—"

"Dies?" broke in the old man, "who said anything about dyin'?"

"Then she is not dead?"

"Wuss than that. Why, man, she's married."

"Married?"

"Yes, rot the luck, married to Zeke Jumpson this morning."

"Isn't he good for anything?"

"Good for anything? Why, I tell you he's worth five thousand dollars. She had worked that fellow down fine, she had, and I just came down to-day to arrange for a breach of promise suit. And I think that she should make it all up and marry while I was away. Why that girl has been worth three thousand dollars a year to me ever since she was sixteen years old, and she never went back on her poor old father before. Well, I'll have to scrape along and get all the money out of Zeke I can until they want a divorce." And the old man tottered out, wiping his eyes.—Chaff.

An Unique Bridal Tour.

A giddy but decidedly young married couple arrived at the wharf at the foot of Francisco street, St. Joseph, Mo., in a skiff, one morning recently. The young husband jumped out as the prow touched the bank and after mooring his frail craft asked his female companion to follow. A porter, who happened to be present, took the vessel on board. EATING THE KING

Barbarous Practice in the Kingdom of Dahomey.

The New Monarch's Strange Repast.

When a King of Dahomey dies the heads of the deceased king is immediately severed from the body and placed in a vessel containing palm oil, salt and peppers, where it is retained, usually for years, until required for ceremonial uses pertaining to future coronations.

THE TONGUE OF THE DECEASED KING

is removed from his mouth at the same time and placed with the head, where it is reserved for another purpose—namely, the form called "eating the king." These preliminaries over, the number of slaves required for sacrifice and the amount of money for the rum, gin, and tobacco to be consumed, are collected. When all is thus ready, a deep grave is dug under a tree possessing a low branch overhanging the spot selected for the grave. A slave is then brought forward and placed in a basket with a cover to it. In this cover is an aperture through which the head of the victim appears when the top is closed down. The slave is then enclosed, forced to sit in a cramped position, his knees being forced up well to his chest. At the bottom of the basket is a strong loop or hook, a signal is then given, and the basket is turned upside down, and a rope having been attached to the hook or loop, it is hauled over the branch referred to above to such a height that the executioner can from the victim's body. The head thus falls into the grave beneath. The basket remains suspended as long as blood flows from the body, and eventually the decapitated corpse is carried to a place in the forest close by, where it is then thrown, to be quickly torn to pieces by the wild beasts and vultures. Similar ceremonies are repeated from time to time, until the bottom of the grave is literally paved with heads and saturated with blood. In this condition it forms the foundation on which to place the dead and headless body of the deceased king, wrapped in eight sheets of various hues. His predecessor's head is then brought from the vessel in which it was placed, and put on the headless trunk. Afterward the grave is filled up with the heads of more murdered slaves. Thus ends the first part of the ceremony. Inasmuch as eating being thus put under ground, his successor has something more to do ere he can reign. The institution called "Je Jba" has to be performed. "Jd" meaning to eat, "Oba" the king. To perform this the vessel of palm oil, salt and peppers containing the tongue of the deceased king is brought to his successor, who rises from out of his vessel and emerges in a dripping state in the presence of a large assemblage.

SEVER THE PROTRUDING HEAD

HAVING EATEN HIS PREDECESSOR'S TONGUE,

he has virtually "eaten the king," and has passed through the ceremony necessary to make himself King of Dahomey. Other cruelties followed under the very eyes of the king, the form of torture and death being varied to suit his savage taste. Thus a tree is great height and destitute of branches with the exception of a few small ones at the top, is climbed by a man with a rope in one hand and a sword in the other. Upon reaching the top he cuts off the soft green top of the tree, and then cross-slits the stem longitudinally downwards to the extent of her arms, and then slides down quietly. He then secures the rope to the top of the tree and descends. The rope is hauled at until the tree is so bent down that the top of it is close to the ground. The victim's head is then placed in the slit in the stem, and securely fastened there with rope and string, and when the king is ready the rope which binds the top of the tree to the ground is cut away, causing the tree to spring back into the air to its original position, carrying the unhappy victim with it, who is suffered to perish by there by the slow process of starvation.

Billiard Balls.

Only the tusk of the wild elephant furnishes ivory hard enough to make into billiard balls. The fierce temper of the wild beast hardens and solidifies the tusk, while that of the domesticated elephant is of no use for this purpose. Henry Adolph Meyer of Hamburg, Germany, is the largest dealer in ivory in the world. He sends some 300 tusks of 100 pounds each to buy up supplies, and there are sales at public auction every three months in London, which set the standard for prices which are followed in the trade. Ivory is usually prepared when received by the ball makers. Those parts of the tusks that are of sufficient diameter and perfectly solid are sawed into cubes of the size representing the diameter of the ball and are shipped to them in that shape. These blocks are first put into a lathe and an ivory harness ring turned from the outer edges before work is begun on the ball proper. After these rings are taken off along with the bark of the tusk an eighth of an inch is taken off the block ere it is laid away to season for not less than six months, as it is liable to crack and shrink if used without seasoning. The finished ball from the rough block of hard wood, with a socket capable of holding one-third of the ball is well chalked and the ball inserted. The rotating mechanism is then set and he launches himself upon his quarry with five or six vigorous and rapid bounds, strakes it instantaneously, and drinks its blood. The hunting-ground of the leopard, unless caught him, wins him from his prey by placing the blood which he collects in a wooden ladle under the nose of the animal, or by throwing to him the ladle full of blood, while he is thus kept quiet, hoods him, leads him back to the car, and there chains him to the floor. The leopard falls, in consequence of the herd having taken timely alarm, but attempts no pursuit, but returns to his car with a very dejected and mortified air.

Friendship.

Passing by a blacksmith shop one evening, I heard the ring of blows upon the anvil. I stopped, went in and asked the man why he worked so late.

"I am at work for my neighbor across the way. He has sickness and is very poor. I rise two hours earlier and work two later, which makes two days a week for him. I have only the blows of my hammer to give him. So long as one has an arm, he must use it for the needy."

"That is right," said I, "but do you think he will ever be able to repay you?"

"Perhaps not," replied the blacksmith, "but I shall be no poorer, and his little ones will not die of hunger. We must help one another; if my house had been burned, I should have been very glad of his assistance."

I rode on, thinking with Burns,

"The rank is but the guinea's stamp;
The good's the good for a' that."

Ladies of Seville at a Bull-Fight.

Charles Dudley Warner's humorous account in the November Century of a fashionable bull-fight at Seville, describes the ladies of Spain, except in some remote towns in the mountain regions, have laid aside the national costume, and dress according to the dictates of Paris, preferring even the French fans to their own decorated with the incidents of the bull-fight and the arena. In Seville, the black lace mantilla is still worn at church, and to some extent on the street; but the hat is the cover of the new fashion, more's the pity, and the picturesque hats have gone altogether. I do not know why a woman, even a plain woman, should be so utterly improved by a mantilla, thrown over a high comb and falling gracefully over the shoulders, stepping daintily in high-heeled shoes with pointed toes, and moving with an air that makes the enchanted tropic air so accurately calculated to wound but not to kill. In the whole assembly I saw only one or two national costumes; the mantilla and the high comb, with the short petticoat, brilliant in color. Nothing could be more becoming, and it seem idle to doubt whether woman's strongest desire is to please, and whether it is not rather to follow the fashion, when we see a whole nation abandon such a charming attire.

"But the white mantilla is de rigueur for a bull-fight, and every lady wore one. It was a little odd to see ladies in the broad light of day, in crowded cars, and in the gaze of the public, in full (as it is called) costume of the ball-room; but the creamy white mantillas softened somewhat the too brilliant display, and threw over the whole the harmony of subdued splendor. What superb Spanish lace, blonde, soft, with a silken lustre, falling in lovely folds that show its generous size and exquisitely wrought figures, each leaf and stem and flower the creation of dainty fingers! Such work as this, of such a material, in such large and soft mantillas, sweeping from the head to the train, is scarcely to be found in the shops now days. A fine old Spanish lady, wearing great-grandmother's lace, long yellowing, and growing rich in locked chests, worn only on state occasions, and now brought forth to make a bull's holiday.

"We spent a good deal of the waiting time in scrutinizing the packed seats for beautiful women, and, I am sorry to say, I latter hardly a reward adequate to our anxiety and I am not sure how much the beauty of the women of Seville is traditional. They have good points. Grace-ful figures are not uncommon, and fine teeth, and dark, liquid, large eyes, which they use perpetually in ceillades destructive to peace and security. And the fan, the most deadly weapon of coquetry, gives great grace to those whom the eyes fail to have wounded. But the Seville women have usually sallow, pasty, dead complexions. Perhaps the beauty of the skin is destroyed by cosmetics, for one was not a lady at the bull-fight who was not highly rouged and powdered. This gave an artificiality to their appearance en masse. Beauty of features is a very rare, and still rarer was that animation, that stamp of individual character, loveliness in the play of expression, and sprightliness, that charm in the women of American women. No, the handsome women in the ring were not numerous enough to make any impression on the general mass, and by the time I came to see the blonde lace, the artificial color, the rich toilet, and the agitation of fans, was charming."

Is the Old Faith Dying?

It is often said specifically that men of affairs, as a class, have lost their interest in the churches, and an attempt was lately made to show the truth of this notion. In an Eastern city, with a population of a little less than forty thousand, the president and cashier of one of the business banks were requested to furnish a list of the fifty strongest business firms in the city, with the name of the head of each firm. The gentleman furnishing the list had no knowledge whatever of the case that was to be made of it. In classifying fifty-four names thus given, it was found that there were seven whose relation to the churches was unknown to the gentleman who had obtained the list; six who were not identified with any of them; and forty-one who were all regular attendants upon the churches and generous supporters of them, and of the great majority of them communicants. In a Western city of a little more than sixty thousand inhabitants, a similar list of fifty was made up, and the result was the same way; and the analysis showed three whose ecclesiastical standing was unknown; one Jew; six not connected with the churches; and forty-two regular church-goers, of whom thirty-one were communicants. These lists were both made up by well-informed and sagacious business men; the cities represented by them are not remarkable for religious communities; and the composition of them gives small color to the notion that the business men of our cities are estranged from the churches. It is astonishing that such a notion should ever have gained currency, in the face of the palpable fact that so much money is contributed every year by business men for the support of the prosecution of their charitable and missionary enterprises.—Century.

Two Portraits of Queen Victoria.

Accompanying Mrs. Oliphant's article in the November Century are a copy of a recent photograph of the Queen and a frontispiece copy of Thomas Sully's oil study from life, made in 1838. Of the latter Mrs. Oliphant says: "The first time I saw the Queen was on a state occasion, of some great public ceremonial in Liverpool, when she must have been in the fullness of her early prime, somewhat about thirty-five years of age. Sully's is the portrait which the readers of this magazine have now presented to them. Her eyes seemed to me her most remarkable feature; they were of a blue gray, a clearest color, not dark enough ever to be mistaken for black, but with nothing of the washy grayness into which blue eyes sometimes fall in the other side. This beauty was very much enhanced by the straight, forward, all-embracing look, which, to a stranger, had a kind of inquiry, and some ten years younger,—was queenly in the highest degree. It was the look of one who knew, with all modesty and humility, that she was a person to be seen, she could encounter no glance so potent, so important, as her own. She met the thousand faces turned toward her with a royal serenity which it is impossible to describe. By nature the Queen is shy, and shrinks from the gaze of the crowd, but her look was sovereign over all such natural tendencies,—the true gaze of the Queen. This is less remarkable now, perhaps, than it was in her younger days; but the reader will see something of this open-eyed serenity in the eyes of the portrait, though they are those of a girl of nineteen."

The dudine, after critically examining the magnificent proportions of the dude, timidly remarked: "George, darling, if I am going to wear the breeches after we get married, you will have to get them made larger than that."

How the Teacher was Trapped.

Mr. Johnson, the High school teacher of Brigham, was a first rate teacher, and if his obituary had been written no doubt would have declared him to be "a kind husband and father." But he was a man of peculiarities, for all that, and one was a disapprobation of kid gloves. "Unnecessary extravagance," he called them; "effeminate, effeminate, effeminate." Now his twin daughters Prue and Patty, being just fifteen, naturally thought otherwise, kid gloves being to the average young miss what water is to ducks. But all their wishes were of no avail. In winter their delicate hands were made into paws," as Prue declared with mutiny, while in summer they were allowed nothing daintier than lisle-thread.

The lucky day for them, when things had rolled smoothly at school, when the wind was in the west, the coffee clear, the steak "done to a turn," and all those trifles that make angels, or the reverse, of us, were favorably bent, Mr. Johnson announced at dinner that he thought it would be an excellent plan for the Spoken Improvement Society, said society to consist of the family alone, the object in view to be, as the name implied, correct speaking. He was sure, he said, that the president of the society could be guilty of a lapsus lingue, but it may be interesting to see how-many mistakes ordinary people liable to make in one evening, and

"But supposing, papa, said darling Prue, "supposing the sky should fall, or the cat should swallow a mouse, or an inaccuracy, as you say, what then?"

"My daughter," said her father, benignly, "in such a case I am safe in presuming any reasonable reason you may claim."

"Kid gloves!" ventured Patty.

"I am safe, I think, in saying yes," said her father.

"I choose pearl-colored," cried Prue.

"I will have brown," said Patty.

"And I would like drab," added Mrs. Johnson, who was all compliance.

When Mr. Johnson came home at night he inquired how soon tea would be ready.

"Just as soon as the tea-kettle boils," replied his pleasant helpmate.

"Error one!" exclaimed the teacher, with such a crushing sense of superiority that his wife and daughters wondered that they had ever dared dream of kid gloves.

"It is astonishing," said Mr. Johnson, "how people will persist in talking of 'boiled tea-kettles' for supper. This is an instance of the many inaccuracies that are daily in use. I think our improvement society will be a success."

Meek Mrs. Johnson said nothing more during supper.

Right across the street from them lived an elderly widow, who was quite alone, and who was the object of many attentions from the young men.

That night a snowfall whitened the sidewalks. Mr. Johnson was an active and prudent man. He was up betimes, and cleared his own walk, and then was at his head in at the door long enough to say—

"I will come into breakfast as soon as I have the old lady shoveled out."

"Then you get somebody aboard the shovel," retorted Prue, "you might bring her in to see us, and hand our kid gloves in at the same time."

Mr. Johnson was ready for a very agreeable husband and father came into breakfast late, bringing three nice little bundles, which he laid beside the plates of his wife and daughters. Prue and Patty found their favorite shades in number five French kids, and Mrs. Thompson rejoiced in a whole box of dainty gloves.

"Mr. Johnson, you are on the whole," said the teacher, "that criticism within the family circle is undesirable. In fact, I have made up my mind to drop the teacher, henceforth, when I open my door, and then may I be called to the tea-kettle," my dear, when you please."

Now that the kid gloves were earned.—Journal of Education.

He Felt Kinder Gone.

He had just got his oyster shop opened up the other day when in came a man who asked:

"Got any raws?"

"Yes, sir."

"Bring 'em on the half shell?"

"We do."

"Extra large?"

"We have some of the largest oysters I ever saw."

The price was asked and given, and, as it seemed to be satisfactory, the man ordered a dozen, adding:

"I've got a slight contraction of the throat, and I can't swallow 'em sometimes I choke. If anything happens to me, run me to the door where I can get the air, and then rush for a drink of water."

The dozen was opened with the utmost caution, but it was only when the twelfth and last oyster was taken in between two rows of teeth, which stood out like tenpenny nails, that anything happened. Then the eater suddenly raised one leg, his eyes bulged out, and he began to skip around like a goat dodging a club. The choke had come. The proprietor added him out the door and ushered him to the door, and then hurried to the rear end of the restaurant for a glass of water. When he returned with it, half expecting to see the gasping man on the floor in the agonies of suffocation, no one was in sight. The man was not in the door, nor at the door, nor around the door. He was two blocks away, and he felt kinder gone that he had gone down to keep the company of the other eleven.

Just exactly another such thing won't happen in that place again.

American Cider.

Among the articles which Englishmen are glad to import from this country is American cider. Within the last three or four years a large trade has sprung up between New York and Liverpool, and a dozen merchants handle American cider and perry in London. The cider is made mostly in Devonshire, brings a less price than the American. Some cid also goes to France, but Frenchifiers are used to make it as much like Champagne as possible. The pressing is all done by steam, in October, November and December. The apples used are mostly of the unpruned kind,

"I am beside myself," said Lorenzo, as he stood by a portrait of himself in the artist's studio. "It isn't the first time though, Lorenzo," sighed his wife in martyr tones.

"Vegetable pills!" exclaimed the old lady; "don't talk to me of such stuff. The best vegetable pill ever made is an apple dumpling!" Exit, destroying a gnawing at the stomach, there's nothing like it.

A bachelor, meeting a wit, angled for an invitation from the latter to call on him. At last the wit yielded, and gave the bore an invitation, saying, "Come at any time as I shall be glad to see you on any day except the day you call."

"My case is just here," said a citizen to a lawyer. "The plaintiff will swear that I hit him. I will swear that I did not. Now what can you lawyers make out of that if we go to trial?" "A hundred dollars easy," was the reply.

PUN UPON PUN.—Two Oxonians dining together, one of them noticing the smell of grease on the neckcloth of his companion, said, "I see you are a Grecian." "Pooh!" said the other, "that's far-fetched." No, indeed," says the punster. "I made it on the spot."

When Pilkinsbury moved away from town he was asked if he received anything in his way of a farewell from his citizens. "No," he replied, "nothing; though I believe there was something said about my receiving the congratulations of the people on my change of residence."

Lord Odo Russell, while calling upon Prince Bismarck a short time ago, asked him how he managed to rid himself of that great unfortunate, who, knowing he could not well refuse to see, but whose room he found preferable to their company. "Oh," replied the chancellor, "I have a very simple method. My wife knows them pretty well, and when she sees they are with me, she generally contrives to come in and call me away upon some pretext or other. He had scarcely finished speaking when the princess put her head in at the door, and said, 'Otto, you must come and take your medicine. You ought to have had it ten minutes ago.' Lord Odo Russell had not till then had any idea that his room could be more welcome than his company.

Elitical Cu'ture.

IT was in September, 1879. The train that bore Bob Hawkins to college caught him away from the arms of his mother, and the kisses of his sisters. Very quiet was Bob Hawkins, and very reluctant he to go to school.

"Aw, shaw!" he growled; "I don'tawant to go, nuther, so what's the use? Doggone the college, it don't do no good, an' I won't know no more when I come back than I do when I go away. I'd druther be a team 'r learn a trade 'r somethin. Dod fetch the thing anyhow."

June, 1882. Ambrose Hawkins returns to the ancestral halls on the farm; his family weep for joy. All rush to embrace him as he steps from the train. Ambrose Hawkins gazes fondly on them through the oriel window but insinuates one eye, and delicately extending two fingers for them to grasp, he inquires:

"Aw, fathaw! gently, my de-ah fellah, gently; easy on the rings, yo know; bless you, my mothaw—thaw! how yo look, kiss you when we get home, yo know; how do, brothaw—brothaw—well, bless me soul but aw live forgot em. Hi! Sawah, sis, stah deah, will you kindly hand those brawes for me boxes to the luggage mawsah? Aw—ta—ta—ta—ha—ha—ha—ha—ha—ha!"

And all the way home the old man didn't say a word, but he just drove and thought and drove, and nearly forgot to stop and up twisting hickories and laying them to soak in the watering trough down by the cook shan. And he told a neighbor the next day that Charles Fancis Adams was right, and that he had about four years of college l'arning to unlarn for Bob afore he boy could unhitch at a yoke of oxen like he used to, but the boy seemed to be comin' round all right, and he reckoned he'd do, by-'e-by."

"Then, if I understand you," said a merchant to a customer, "you do not intend to pay the boy's name, I take." "Your understanding is correct, cap'n." "And you call yourself an honest man, do you?" "Yes, sir." "I were not honest, if I would tell you that I intend to pay; I would tell you a lie; being honest, I do not wish to deceive you."

Mr. Wolohin, of Albany, Fla., set a hen on hen's eggs. He lifted her up the other day and found her keeping warm three young kittens, a powder gourd, and a door knob; and he's putting in his time now wondering how it occurred, instead of laying for his neighbor's boy.

BLACK SPIRITS AND WHITE.

BY SOPHIE SWETT.

"Anstice has one of her 'weird seizures;' she is sitting, looking rapt, with a black stump of a pencil in her hand, that is writing, slowly and deliberately for the most part, but occasionally with a jerk that shakes her arm off the paper. Even if one could doubt Anstice's word, one could see she isn't writing. I may be weak-minded, but I will acknowledge to feeling creepy; and I wish that the person who dragged forth that little demon of a Planchette from the darkness of the dark closet might see a ghost every night!"

Mary Steyner proves her possession of a "creepy," feeling by a little shrug and shiver.

"Look up from my work, a stock in which I have been stitching the long, precious morning hours, and whose legs have proved to be stumpy and will have to be taken out, yes, they are unkindly stumpy, mind—look up, and say, indifferently, I'm all fun. What harm does it do? But it so seldom tells the truth that I get tired of it."

"It! it! What is it?" cries Mary Steyner excitedly. "You don't seem to realize what a mystery it is! Do you believe it is spirits?"

Mary Steyner drops her voice, and pronounces the last word in an awe-striken tone.

"Nonsense!" say I. "Spirits would nevercome back to write such stupid things and tell such lies!"

"Not unless they were bad ones," says Mary Steyner reflectively. "While it was Planchette it didn't seem quite so dreadful, because there was the bit of pencil, a useless piece of wood, that we could not well refuse to see, but whose room he found preferable to their company." "Oh," replied the chancellor, "I have a very simple method. My wife knows them pretty well, and when she sees they are with me, she generally contrives to come in and call me away upon some pretext or other." He had scarcely finished speaking when the princess put her head in at the door, and said, 'Otto, you must come and take your medicine. You ought to have had it ten minutes ago.' Lord Odo Russell had not till then had any idea that his room could be more welcome than his company.

"Anstice's eyes are closed, and there is a little smile on her face, as if she were listening to some unspeakably sweet music. Her hand is stiffening, slowly and deliberately for the most part, but occasionally with a jerk that shakes her arm off the paper. Even if one could doubt Anstice's word, one could see she isn't writing. I may be weak-minded, but I will acknowledge to feeling creepy; and I wish that the person who dragged forth that little demon of a Planchette from the darkness of the dark closet might see a ghost every night!"

"Dr. Felix is in the library, too, pretending to read a book, but really watching Anstice. He has been talking about it most learnedly. My small powers of comprehension were completely benumbed by the first sentence, and before he had finished the room whirled around me. He talked about 'unconscious cerebration,' and 'cerebral automatism,' and 'unconscious solution;' and jelly-fish and the molecules of human brains were beginning to mix up with them in a way that I could not well understand

HOME MATTERS.

Stirling Orangemen had no doings whatever on the 8th.

Front street sidewalk has been fixed, so you foreign your little teeter as you walk past the Pennock property.

Mr. E. F. Parker's store is nearly ready for occupation, and he will open out a fine assortment of new goods in a few days.

Parker & Butler will move into their new premises next week, as will also Jas. Milne & Co., hardware. Ground is broken for the new News-Argus office, and it will be pushed to a speedy completion, and at once occupied.

Mr. Samuel Mundell, sr., for many years a resident of Stirling, yesterday (Thursday) morning at 10 o'clock was seized with a fit of apoplexy in his yard, and expired four hours after. The funeral takes place to-morrow (Saturday), at two o'clock, from the house.

On Wednesday last Mr. H. Utman was in the hardware store making some purchases, and on going out left his pocket-book, containing about $100 in cash, on the counter, where it lay for an hour or so before discovered. It was sent up to him, but had not yet been missed.

Yesterday (Thursday) being thanksgiving day, union services were held in the C. M. church at 10.30, and in the M. E. at 7.30. Rev. Mr. Stratton to preach in the morning, and Rev. Mr. Leitch in the evening, but indisposition on the part of the first named gentleman necessitated his place being taken by Rev. Mr. Leitch.

The anniversary services at Benlah M. E. church were an immense success. The crowds on Sunday were all the church would hold, and the sermons by the three rev. gentlemen named last week were good. On Monday evening the place was again packed. The proceeds of the collections and tea amounted to $127. The Stirling choir supplied the music.

The attendants at St. Andrew's church on Sunday last enjoyed an especially rare treat in the form of two sermons from Rev. Dr. Barnett, of Picton, N. S., who was stopping over a Sunday with Rev. Mr. Gray. Dr. Barnett's visit was caused by the sad circumstance of the death of his daughter Emily, who died recently at Hamilton, where he had been to attend the funeral. Deceased was a sister of Mrs. Gray and Miss Alice Burnett.

We publish this week a sermon on regeneration, preached by Rev. A. Wilson, of Marmora, in his church. It causes quite a strain upon our limited space, and as a result the "boiling-down" process has to be vigorously resorted to, and this explains the brevity with which some important interests are treated. We purpose publishing a sermon by some local minister at intervals hereafter, at the special advice and request of many influential and kindly interested readers.

Messrs. Jas. and Wm. Gallagher, of Huntingdon, have bought Mr. D. Sine's farm, in the 6th con. of Rawdon. Mr. Sine has purchased from Mr. Boldrick the dwelling formerly occupied by Mr. Skinner, and will move into the village about Dec. 1st. His farm stock and implements will be sold by Mr. Butler at auction on the 27th inst. Mr Skinner has moved into the large white house, two doors further east, formerly occupied by Rev. Mr. Golden.

Below will be found the report of S.S. No. 22, Sidney, for the month of October:—Class IV—Hattie Bailey, Willie Grieve, Walter Anderson, Frank Hubel. Sr III Class—Willie Bailey, Minnie Grieve, Harry Anderson, Willie Holden. Jr. III Class—Aggie Bailey, George Anderson, George Hammond, Allan Hammond. Sr II Class—Peter McKee, David Benedict, Stephen Nolan, John Nugent. Jr. II Class—Annie Winter, Blanche Grieve, Emma Miller, James Murphy, Freddie White. B. F. Black teacher.

The following item appears in the "Trade, traffic and commerce" column of the London Free Press: Mr. Boulter, of the firm of Boulter & Dunning, proprietors of the bay of Quinte canning company, Picton, has returned from Charlotte, N. Y., to which place he shipped his first consignment of canned plums—130 tons. This firm has purchased and canned for the American market over five thousand bushels of plums and gages. The crop not being good on the other side, the firm made a favorable contract, and thus was enabled to make a market for the large quantity of plums grown in Prince Edward county. They have about 100 tons still to ship to the same place, besides putting up a large portion for the North-West. They give employment, through the canning season, to from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five persons.

Milne & Clute this week moved into their new premises, which are even better than the business places in many respects. The dry goods department is graced with two magnificent plate glass windows in front, in which goods can be shown to splendid advantage. Within the same general disposition of goods as of old is found, but the arrangement of the building is materially different. The stairway, instead of ascending from the centre, winds around to the left, leaving nearly the whole width of the store extending back. Beyond the stairway the office is to be situated, much easier of access than of old. Opening from it is a fire-proof vault, inside of which will be a safe for valuables. At the rear of this again is the "back shop," or store-room. Up stairs is found a large landing which overlooks the store below. Two windows up here light up the landing and the rear of the store nicely through the opening. The dress-making and tailoring departments occupy their old positions. Miss Dafoe returned on Tuesday to resume the dress-making, which had been suspended since the fire, as well as several other branches, for want of room. The grocery, boot and shoe and crockery and glassware departments are arranged as formerly. Rev. Mr. Dowling is painting the curtains for the front windows, to replace the burnt ones, which is a sufficient guarantee that they will be artistically executed. The staff consists of Miss Ella Chisholm and Messrs. Jas. Geary, Frank Ackermap and Alex. McDonnell, besides the members of the firm.

After last week's issue, we were called upon by Dr. Rosevally, with a courteous request to examine his credentials. A number of them were produced, for easy use, but the originals were produced, and carefully compared. A number of other letters, of late date (as all were, in fact) and of a purely family nature, were also shown, and indicated that the Dr. was not only in good standing where he was known, but that he was very highly esteemed by many prominent members of the Methodist denomination in the United States. Moreover, further correspondence was shown from Rev. Dr. White, of Brooklyn, N.Y., relating to and arranging the delivery of two lectures to be delivered by the Dr. in Brooklyn on the 12th and 13th inst. A portion of this came to hand at the very moment, viz., last Friday morning. The whole, the credentials and private correspondence taken together, could not but inspire confidence, especially when it is known that Rev. Mr. Stratton had a private note from the same Rev. Dr. White, previous to Dr. Rosevally appearing in Stirling, commending him in earnest language, and deprecating the evil charges which were following him wherever he went. So, the weight of evidence being strongly in the Dr.'s favor, it can only be accepted as British fair play to hold him free from the charges until they are established at least as certainly as his good character is. It is quite incomprehensible how an impostor can be upheld by the high church dignitaries that uphold him; and if he is such, then no man can feel safe to go amongst strangers armed with the strongest testimonials from the highest and purest in church and state. And if he be not the Christian and gentleman that he seems to be, then should all those prominent Methodists of Brooklyn and other places be stigmatized with him as frauds of the deepest shade, for upholding him in his imposition.

The Fifth at Holloway.

Holloway L. O. L. lodge No. 251 celebrated the fifth of November in a very becoming and orderly manner. Having invited Rev. R. H. Leitch to preach a sermon on the occasion, at the appointed hour the members of the lodge, with quite a large number of their friends, assembled in the C. M. church, adjoining the lodge-room, to take part in the services of the day. The rev. gentleman took for his text—John IV, 38: "Other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors." Commencing with some of the chief reforms in the history of the world, and showing how we were now enjoying the results of the labors of our ancestors in many ways, he gradually led his audience through the ages down to the present day, and from temporal to spiritual matters, the discourse being replete with illustrations drawn from reality, and evincing careful preparation and intelligent study of the subject handled. It was in a very small sense an Orange sermon, but one calculated to profit all or any who might hear it. He enjoined the order, which was founded on noble principles, to shun the evils which were creeping upon it, to avoid intemperance, and to be the tool of no political party. At the close of the service nearly all those assembled repaired to the hotel, kept by Mr. Geo. Rose, where was spread a banquet which would do credit to many a larger place. In fact, we have partaken of pretentious repasts in Stirling and elsewhere which would pale when compared with the creditable dinner provided at the little hamlet of Holloway on Monday last. To excel in such an undertaking seems to be characteristic of mine host Rose, for, as one remarked, he "would do it up well, if he lost money on it." After all were satisfied, a few popular toasts were proposed and responded to, and the gathering separated. The master of the lodge, Mr. Stephen Fulton, Messrs. John and Wm. Townsend, and others, exerted themselves to make all feel at home, and succeeded. The day was a magnificent one, and had the leaders aimed beforehand to make the demonstration a more complete success in point of numbers, etc., they could easily have done so, as no point is more favorably situated for such an event.

SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE.

This is beyond question the most successful cough medicine we have ever sold, a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of cough, croup and bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no medicine can stand. If you have a cough we certainly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c., and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest or back lame, use Shiloh's porous plaster. G. H. BOULTER, sole agent.

ANSWER THIS QUESTION:

Why do so many people we see around us seem to prefer to suffer and be made miserable by indigestion, constipation, dizziness, loss of appetite, coming up of the food, yellow skin, when for 75c. we will sell them Shiloh's Vitalizer, guaranteed to cure them? G.H. BOULTER, sole agent.

A QUERY ANSWERED.

People often ask when is the best time to take a blood purifier? We answer, the best time is now. Burdock Blood Bitters does its work of purifying, regulating, and toning the system at all times and all seasons. Purity in all things is always in order when required.

Lindsay's Wharf, August 22nd, 1885.

Messrs. Churchill & Co., Gents,—I have been afflicted with Salt Rheum for the past three years, and have been treated by some of the best doctors in Eastern Ontario without any lasting benefit. I was recommended by Mr. C. J. Lindsay, of Kars, to try your Fountain of Health. After using five bottles of the Fountain and two bottles of your Climax Salve, I believe I am perfectly cured. My general health is also much improved, and I now feel like a new man.

Yours truly,
ROBT. BURNETT,
Engineer Str. "Olive," Montreal and Portland Line.

August 26th, 1885.

Dalmeny P. O., Tp. Otonabee.

Messrs. Churchill & Co., Dear Sirs,—I have been troubled with Piles for the last five years, and during that time I have taken medicine from five doctors which failed to effect a cure. I have used only one box of your Climax Eye Salve, which I purchased from W. F. Ritchie, of Osgoode Station, and can recommend it as a SAFE CURE to all afflicted with the same disease. I consider your Fountain of Health an excellent tonic to build up the system.

Yours truly,
ARCHIE McDIARMID.

A correspondent of the Montreal Witness described the steerage passage on an Allan line steamer as being most shockingly bad, giving some sickening particulars. The Allans sued the Witness for $50,000 damages for libel. The case was closed a few days ago, the Witness being fully sustained on every count by the jury.

Marmora News.

From Our Own Correspondent.

This village seems to be the asylum of all the evil-doers and wicked outcasts of Stirling. Not long since, we were visited by one of the light-fingered gentry from that place, but he made his visit short, leaving for parts unknown. Last week we were again favored; this time by the presence of a gentleman who had appropriated a suit of clothes and a watch belonging to a resident of Stirling, named Williams. He was followed here by the victim of the robbery and another man, who having found their man, made him a prisoner. They locked him up securely in a room in the Provincial hotel, and as it was about noon, supplied him with his dinner and a drink of something strong to sustain his flagging spirits. The prisoner, having finished his repast, sent down the plate and fork, but retained the knife. With this he quietly proceeded to remove the lock of the door, and, while his captors were in the bar-room enjoying themselves, and vowing to visit on him a terrible retribution for his crimes, walked out unmolested and escaped. The two Stirling gentlemen were much disappointed and crestfallen, and after having made a hasty and fruitless search for the man who had thus outwitted them, they departed. We presume it is unnecessary to attach a moral to this story, as no doubt they have learned such lessons as it may teach already.

Miss Craske is now organist of the English church here. With Miss Craske's advent to the stool of the organ, the congregation may expect, and no doubt will enjoy, good music.

Rev. Mr. Wilson is busily engaged in superintending the building of a new church in the Wylie settlement, a few miles from here.

A Queer Creed.

Under the above heading, the Maloc Review of last week says: On Thursday last a family named Reynolds, from Thurso, who had lost an only daughter by death, about six years of age, brought the corpse to this village expecting to give it a Christian burial under the auspices of the Episcopalian church. Arrived at the church, however, the officiating clergyman, Rev. Mr. Jones, on learning that the child had not been baptised, refused to let the body go into the church or to have anything to do himself with conducting the burial service at the grave. The ministers of other denominations in town had then to be applied to, but all happened to be absent at the time, and the unfortunate father might have buried his child alone and with as little ceremony as he would his dog had not Mr. E. D. O'Flynn kindly offered to read the burial service over the little one's grave. Before reaching the graveyard, however, Rev. Mr. Baker returned, and gave his services in giving the body a Christian burial, to which, under any circumstances, it was surely entitled. Rev. Mr. Jones may have been carrying out the dictates of his prayer-book, but he did a heartless and unchristian act, nevertheless; and one we are sure not sanctioned by the Christian members of his church in this village. It might have been considered that, however much the parents of the child may have wished for baptism before her death, such a ceremony could not be performed on short notice at the distance they resided from a regular clergyman. But surely it is not possible that such a belief as that the fate of the little child not being baptized polluted its body and condemned its soul—a horrible belief, and worthy only of the darkest and most benighted age of the world's history—is being applied in our enlightened and Christian community! God forbid!

FORTY BILLION GERMS.

A Wonderful Theory that Concerns the Welfare, Happiness and Life of Everyone.

In his quiet and cosy library at the close of a busy day sat a gentleman and his wife. He absorbed in a new book, and she in a newspaper. Quickly glancing toward her husband, she asked, at a certain point in the article,

"John, what is the germ theory?"

"The germ theory—well—you just look in the encyclopædia under 'Germ,' that will explain it so much better than I can."

His wife opened the book at the word named and read. Germ Theory of Disease. Long and learnedly the most able and best investigators and scientists of the times. It supposes the surface of the earth, the air and water to be inhabited to a greater or less extent with a peculiar growth of the lowest form of fungi—commonly termed bacteria, whose power of reproduction, under favorable conditions, is so great that a single germ will increase to fifteen million in twenty-four hours; and, if not unchecked in its increase would grow to a mass of eight hundred tons, in three days' time, if space and food be furnished. There is no condition under which it can be said to be absent, unless it be from fire or air filtered through cotton batting in numerous layers. A single drop of water could, if coming in, put into water boiled, filtered and thus freed from bacteria, will grow murky in a day or two from the development of new germs. When it is considered that it requires about forty billion to weigh one grain, some remedies can be had of the immense rapidity of germ reproduction. Professor John Tyndall, in a late work, elaborately treats of the influence of germs in the propagation of disease, and charges upon this cause the inception and development of very many of the ailments most injurious to man. Professor Pasteur, an eminent French savant, has carried his original and beautiful experiments so far, and from them deduced such practical results as very greatly to diminish the number of cases of anthrax among sheep and chicken cholera among fowls—proving his theory that these are essentially and actually germ diseases. These germs are carried into the system through the lungs, the stomach and possibly the skin, but chiefly the lungs and skin. Once in the system, they begin to develope, poisoning the blood, invading the nerve centres, disturbing the functional activity of the great organs of the body and inducing a general impairment of the vital processes. They are the causes of fevers, diphtheria, Bright's disease of the kidneys, pneumonia, blood poisoning, liver disease, diphtheria and many other ailments. Lately Professor Koch, a famous German physician, has proved that consumption of the lungs is due to this cause—the presence of a peculiar germ.

When the circulation is sounding, the nerves elastic and the system all aglow with life and energy, the germs seem to develop poorly, if at all. But with weakened nerves, poor digestion or malassimilation of food or a lowering of vitality from any cause, a change ensues, and in this impoverished and weakened fluid the germ finds a genial home and develops until systems of disease are distinctly manifested. This is seen in the everyday experience of all. The healthy man resists the influences around him and does not take cold, while those whose systems have become weak from any cause readily contract colds. This is on the same principle as the germ theory. The germs attack any weakened spot in the body, and fixing themselves upon it, begin their propagation. It is plain therefore that it is only by fortifying the weak portions of the body that the germs of disease can be repelled and driven from the system. But this has proved almost an impossibility heretofore, and it has been the study of physicians for years how best to accomplish it. Within the past few years, however, a preparation has been attracting great attention, notably throughout the entire land, but among the medical profession and scientists generally, which is based upon this theory, and it may safely be said, no remedy has ever been found which can so successfully place the system in a condition to resist the germs of disease as Warner's Safe Cure. This article is unquestionably the best and most efficient that has ever been discovered for this purpose, and—

"John, say, John! does the encyclopedia advertise Warner's Safe Cure?"

"I should not wonder, dear; it's a grand remedy, and that pamphlet we received the other day stated that Dr. Gunn, of the United States Medical College, endorsed it. At all events the wonderful cures it is accomplishing entitle it to be favorably noted among the great discoveries of the present century."

However the facts above stated may be, the truth remains that the germ theory of disease is the correct one and that the great remedy mentioned is the only one which has ever been found that can put the system in a condition to kill these germs before they obtain a hold upon the body, and undermine the life.

An interesting case was tried at the Napanee assizes, the parties to it being an M.P. and a retired clergyman. At Roe was the plaintiff, and he sought to obtain damages for a slander said to have been circulated by Mr. Seeley to the effect that he said Jesus Christ was a bastard and a thief. The only evidence the plaintiff could give as to the circulation of the slander was based on an admission made to him by defendant that he, the latter, might have told some one that Roe said our Saviour was a bastard and a thief. Mr. Roe denied having ever made such an assertion. For the defence eight witnesses were called, all of whom swore they never heard Roe use blasphemy such as that above referred to, some of it even far more disgusting. It was testified that he had applied indecent epithets to the Virgin Mary, ridiculed the miracles, and call the bible was not a fit book to be in any man's family. There were other such expressions attributed to Roe. One Judge thinker who gave evidence said he still believed Roe held these views, but that on the ground of political expediency he may have been converted from them. A great many people were in court during the trial. At the conclusion of the evidence the judge held there was no evidence for the jury, and the plaintiff was nonsuited.

Dear Sirs—For over twenty years I have suffered greatly from Nasal Catarrh; sometimes being unable to smell or taste properly. The disease caused a severe pain over the eyes, and frequently occasioned violent attacks of dizziness. The pain in my head also so much annoyed my speaking voice, that I hardly could speak for the mucus which would occasionally fall down into my throat, and I could seldom breathe through my nose. I have taken quarts of various medicines without any apparent benefit, until I was induced, by your agent of Carleton street, Toronto, to try Catarrhozone. After using five bottles I am prepared to give it as my honest opinion that it is the cure par excellence for nasal catarrh. I have recommended it to many of my friends, one of whom enclosed me the money for a bottle.

Wishing you deserved success,
I am, gentlemen, Yours truly,
JOSEPH BROWN,
Bookkeeper, 25 Sherbourne street, Toronto.

HOUSE PLANTS.

Many a beautiful rose has been nipped in the bud by an undiscovered worm, and many a young life has been sacrificed to the destructive power of worms in the human system. If you would save those other tender house plants, your children, give them Dr. Fowler's Wild Strawberry. They are safe and pleasant, and are warranted effectual.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Whatever prevents "Constipation of the bowels?" It means that we have the power of certain glands and organs of the body to hold and distribute the fluids of the system, such as bile from the liver, etc. Burdock Blood Bitters regulates all the organs of the secretions to make pure blood.

...happy thereafter, the wife ... absolutely refusing to be parted from her female husband. While there may be serious drawbacks to a girl in having a husband of the same sex, there are many advantages. Men are after all such dull, stupid creatures, compared to a lower key than the advanced female of the present day, that it is no wonder that the latter have to seek in their own sex that congeniality of spirit and sympathy of understanding that is denied them in the other. Then, what more could a young woman ask for than a husband who never smokes, drinks, swears, slams the doors, stays out late at nights, who could grow enthusiastic over a fashion plate, and discuss feminine dress and its belongings with intelligence and appreciation?

Burdock BLOOD BITTERS.
ACTS UPON THE BOWELS, LIVER, KIDNEYS AND THE BLOOD.

The Kingdom of Home.

Dark is the night and fitful and dreary
Rushes the wind, like the waves of the sea.
Little care I, as here I sing cheerily,
Wife at my side and babe on my knee.
King, king, crown me the king,
Home is the kingdom and love is the king.

Flashes the firelight upon the dear faces,
Dearer and dearer as onward they go;
Forces the shadow behind us and places
Brightness and joy as with wand, in the glow.
King, king, crown me the king,
Home is the kingdom and love is the king.

Flashes the firelight, increasing the glory,
Beaming from bright eyes with warmth of the soul,
Telling of trust and content, the sweet story,
Lifting the shadows that over us roll.
King, king, crown me the king,
Home is the kingdom and love is the king.

Richer than mines with perishing treasure,
Served with a service no conquest could bring,
Happy with fortune that words cannot measure,
Light-hearted I on the hearthstone can sing.
King, king, crown me the king,

The New School Readers.

The following is the conclusion of the report of the committee appointed by the North Hastings teachers' association to decide on the merits of the rival series of school readers, which was submitted to that body at its last session. The first portion of the report gives their reasons in detail for favoring the Royal Canadian series:

Speaking generally, we have been attracted by the eminently Canadian tone of the series, by the pure diction of the lessons, and noticeably by the fact that the lessons on temperance and Canadian history have been prepared specially for the series respectively by Prof. Foster, M.P., and the Rev. Dr. Withrow. Each volume of the series bears proof that it has been the work of practical Canadian teachers. With reference to the other series we find Gage's readers generally too limited in scope, many of the lessons pervaded by a non-Canadian tone, and in a great many cases they are inaccurate and ungrammatical. The exercises are not in harmony with the course of study prescribed for public schools, and have in many cases been prepared with little care in practical skill. They contain no systematic instruction in composition. The literary merit of the Royal readers is high, but the books are too short and disconnected. They are deficient in aids to pupils and teachers, and are, for these and other reasons, not adapted for use in rural and partly graded schools. The primer has been constructed on a plan that is antiquated, and not sanctioned by modern educators.

THE FAITH CURE.

One who tried this faith cure declares she was cured—"cured of her faith"—Burdock Blood Bitters cures by works, not by faith alone. It is the grand specific for all diseases of Liver, Kidneys and Blood, purifying, regulating and strengthening the vital system.

The adoption of the new time system by the recent convention of railway men in Chicago will affect every individual in North America who is within reach of railways. The variations of time on different roads are calculated to drive travellers to distraction. Under the new system the whole continent of North America will for time purposes be divided in with into five broad belts running north and south. In each of these belts a single standard of time will be maintained, each differing one hour from the one next it. Local time will therefore differ from railway time from nothing up to thirty minutes, but the agitators in this movement express the hope that difficulty will be avoided by the localities conforming their clocks and watches to the new standards. It is already announced that Boston, whose citizens are now "running" on time twenty-six minutes from the new schedule, will at once make arrangements to change the official time of the city so as to make it uniform with the railroad men's watches. The whole of Ontario westward from Ottawa except a portion of Algoma, will work under standard No. 2. The railway time established by Toronto will be a trifle over seventeen minutes faster than the true solar time. If Boston can afford to make a change of twenty-six minutes, there is no reason why Toronto should not meet the railway men's views also. Were this plan followed generally the securing of uniform time over such wide expanses of territory would be a convenience which could not be over-estimated. The Grand Trunk railway begin running under the new time on the 4th. This is a point worth remembering.

A FORTUNATE ESCAPE.

Mrs. Berkenshaw, 26 Pembroke St., Toronto, at one time was about to submit to a surgical operation for bad lameness of the knee joint, all other treatment having failed, when Hagyard's Yellow Oil was tried, and speedily cured her.

Underpaid Township Officials.

Under the above heading, the Lon Free Press says; There is a general fog growing up among the officials in the country municipalities that they are very ill underpaid. In many cases $100 a yea all that has been given for the manifold vices they are called to render. One one worst economies, as has been proved a and again, is to leave responsible officials in an underpaid condition. It is impossible under such circumstances that they can perform their work in that hearty, cheery manner which is necessary, and the municipality thereby suffers. In order to save a few miserable dollars, which, divided up among the residents would be but the fraction of a fraction, important interests are jeopardized. Besides, as a matter of justice, those who administer the municipal affairs, and who in most cases render opinions in matters of procedure which are of highest importance, are well deserving of that recognition which those kind of services command in other quarters. The township clerk has been generally treated as if he were a man of all-work, who might be buffeted at will, and paid upon the scantiest estimate. The time has fully come when a fuller, a juster amount of remuneration should be meted out to the meritorious township clerk.

A FAILURE IN CROPS.

A species of worm is eating all the leaves from the chestnut and hickory nut trees in many sections, and the crop will be a failure. Worms that afflict children or adults will prove a failure if Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup is used. It is a safe and sure cure for all worms that lurk in the human system, tape worm included.

Queen Victoria has tried to teach her subjects and the world, by an unwavering example during the long years of her reign, that virtue alone secures court recognition below. But for all her rigidity of purpose she has not been successful in keeping the followers of her dull court from wandering into forbidden paths, to the tarnishing of their knightly honor. Whoever such have been, of whatever high degree, the social sins of neither lord nor lady have ever been condoned her majesty. Valentine Baker, who used insulting language to a woman in a railway car, some time ago, has never been received at court. And several dowagers, for the indiscretions of their youth, feel the coolness of the queen's displeasure to this day, when they present themselves at a drawing-room. The latest expression of her disapprobation of blackguardism has been severely meted out to the new Duke of Marlborough, lately notorious in divorce courts and other scandals as the Marquis of Blandford. By the death of his father the marquis succeeds to the title of the Duke of Marlborough, and according to custom he endeavored to deliver the insignia of the Garter, which his father wore, to the queen. On such occasions it is the time-honored action of the sovereign to return it to the successor with some complimentary or congratulatory words. The new duke with the ugly record was denied the presence of her majesty, and brusquely told by a retainer that he might "leave the things with the lord chamberlain." The queen could not prevent the succession of the reprobate son to his fathers title, but he shall not wear the badges of Edward III's institution, the highest order of knighthood in Great Britain, while she can preserve it from such dishonor.

A LITTLE BEHIND HAND.

Some people are always a little behind hand in all undertakings. Delays are dangerous, and none more so than in neglecting what seems a trifling cold. Prudent people break up the ill effect by timely use of Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, thus preventing serious lung troubles.

The penalty of disqualification under the Ontario election law is properly made a very severe one. The person disqualified is by the sentence passed upon him rendered for the space of eight years—two parliamentary terms—incapable (1) of being elected to and sitting in the legislative assembly, (2) of holding any office at the nomination of the crown or of the lieutenant-governor in Ontario, (3) of holding any municipal office, and (4) of voting for the election of any candidate for either a legislative or a municipal position. He would be a vindictive man who would wish to see his worst enemy placed under such a bas that he could not aspire even to the office of pathmaster or poundkeeper. A disqualified candidate is in fact deprived of some of the most valuable franchises that pertain to citizenship, and is liable to be painfully reminded at each recurring municipal election—not to speak of parliamentary contests—of the unpleasant limitations by which he is hedged about. In order to protect the innocent elect from possible wrong, where the consequences of an adverse finding are so highly penal in their character, the election law was amended a few years ago so as to make the concurrence of two judges necessary in a sentence of disqualification, and to leave the respondent a loop-hole of escape by pleading that the corrupt practices of which he may be found personally guilty were perpetrated "without any corrupt intent and in an ignorance which was involuntary and excusable."

OH! WHAT A COUGH.

Will you heed the warning? The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that most terrible disease—consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of 50c. to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from Experience that Shiloh's Cure will Cure your cough; it never fails. This explains why more than a million bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and whooping-cough at once. Mothers, do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. G. H. BOULTER, sole agent.

A man employed on the construction strove to get on the train after it was under way. He caught a plank that was loose, which gave way and he fell into one of the cattle guards. He was picked up for dead, but revived after a few minutes, and his comrades took him on the train. No bones were broken.

SETH GREEN.

What the Great Fish Culturist Says:

Last winter I went to Florida and while there contracted Malaria in a very severe form. When I returned home I went to bed and remained there until spring. My symptoms were terrible. I had dull aching pains in my head, limbs and around my back. My appetite was wholly gone, and I felt a lack of energy such as I had often heard described but had never experienced. Any one who has ever had a severe attack of Malaria can appreciate my condition. As I failed to get any better I determined to try a remedy made by a gentleman in whom I had the greatest confidence; I am happy to say it effected permanent relief, and that I am well to-day through the influence of Warner's SAFE Cure. After such an experience I can most heartly recommend it to all sufferers.

Messrs. Churchill & Co.,—Your Fountain of Health has completely cured me of Dyspepsia, which has troubled me for nearly two years. J. CLARK, 17 Stafford street, Toronto

Friday last will long be a memorable day in the village of Tweed, on account of the arrival of the first locomotive over the O. & Q. railway. An accident took place as the train was leaving on Saturday evening. A man employed on the construction strove to get on the train after it was under way. He caught a plank that was loose, which gave way and he fell into one of the cattle guards. He was picked up for dead but revived after a few minutes, and his comrades took him on the train. No bones were broken.

KHAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. The Intelligencer now appears in a new suit of Miller & Richard's Scotch type, and the improvement is very marked.

Rev. Mr. Stratton has been confined to the house for several days with an affection of the bronchial tubes. His medical adviser has prescribed perfect quiet and no exposure. Rev. W. Clark will preach in his place on Sunday next.

A meeting of the management committee of the bible society will be held at the office of the president, Dr. Boulter, on Monday evening next, for the appointment of collectors, and such other business as may come before the committee. Full attendance requested.

Mr. Charles Panchard, D.S.C.R. of the Independent Order of Foresters, is in the village for the purpose of organizing a court of that order. A public meeting will be held at the Orange hall this (Friday) evening, when the nature and object of the order will be explained.

The Intelligencer of Tuesday says: We learn that Mr. T. P. Pearce has leased the Burrell axe factory, for the manufacture of axes only. The factory is in first-class condition, and under the able management of Mr. Pearce the reputation of its wares will be fully maintained.

The Norwood Register of last week says: Mr. H. Stickle, of Stirling, lately engaged as leader of Norwood brass band, was entertained at an oyster supper at the Commercial house, by the members of the band, on Monday evening last. The usual toasts, etc., were drank, and a very pleasant evening spent. The spread was all that could be desired, and reflected much credit on the house.

A special meeting of the school board was held on Tuesday evening. The only business of importance transacted was authorizing the treasurer to draw on the village treasurer for the amount required by the school for the year, viz., $1,600, and the consideration of teachers' resignations. The whole four teachers tendered their resignations, which were accepted with very little discussion, and the secretary was instructed to advertise in Saturday's Globe and Mail for a new staff, stating the salaries as follows: First department, $500; second, $350; third and fourth, each $250. Male teachers to be required for the first and second departments.

Last Wednesday morning Mr. Jas Coutts was going down the Central Ontario railroad to the "diamond." He smelled a bear going west, and went on to the "diamond," then returned home and sent word to a neighbor to come and bring his hound. The neighbor not arriving, Jim struck out with moccasins on, and if ever a man did penance he says he did. He travelled over ploughed ground and dead furrows for about a mile and a half, until he came to Mr. Bailey's woods, when a few roars from his old hound put his ears and feet in motion, and Mr. Bear resolved to stand the charge on the top of a rail fence. He fired as soon as he came in reach and knocked a little bark off one leg, and Bruin took a higher position. He saw two sights on the rifle and a bead all at one time, and there was a dead bear all at once. He got him out to the road, when the neighbor arrived, and they took the game home.

Attention is drawn to the article elsewhere on the question of standard railway time. Mr. Butcher has informed us that the new time will come in force on the Midland on Monday next, when a new time-table will be issued. It is expected that the trains will run on the same solar time as now, the figures on the time-table being set to correspond with the new standard, which is seventeen minutes faster then present railway time. Travellers will need to bear this in mind. This would be an excellent opportunity for the village to regulate its ways, conforming it to the new standard adopted by the railways, as many other places are doing. At present no two regulators or public institutions run on the same time in Stirling, individual independence in that respect seeming to be the order. The Mail says of the new departure: The standard time of the 75th meridian, which has been adopted by the city and the railway companies, goes into effect at noon on Sunday next, the 18th inst. On and after Monday, the 19th inst. the time rung on the fire alarm bells will be 11.56 standard time. Clocks should be put forward 17 min. 34 secs., to bring them into accord with standard time. At twelve noon on the 18th inst. the tower clocks in the buildings named will indicate standard time, viz.: The post-office, 88 Lawrence hall, the Wiltonavenue fire hall, Queen-street fire hall, the Union station (electric and other dials in connection therewith) also the customs-house, parliament buildings, provincial government offices, Osgoode hall, etc. Messrs. James E. Ellis & Co., official railway timekeepers, have received instructions to supervise the changing of time as above indicated.

The married and single men of Foxboro' engaged in another game of sport hunting last week, which was a great success. Considerable excitement and enthusiasm manifested itself until the day fixed. Early in the morning the men started in all directions—north, south, east and west. Every man was supposed to do his own shooting, but as the rules were not definitely understood they of course deviated therefrom. About twenty on a side started, and, behold, to my surprise their numbers increased from two to ten fold before night. I presume it must have been for the purpose of carrying the game. During the travels of the day I chanced to meet one good, honest fellow, who had a stranger with him, and the two had three game, for what purpose I will not venture an opinion. Others, I learned, started a day or two in advance of the time. A prominent gentleman purchased a flock of tame ducks, and shot them and brought them in to score. The sporting class that day had many friends to escort them through the woods, etc. When evening drew nigh, their men returned heavily laden to the Foxboro' hotel. Messrs. Harford Ashley, Chas. Ashley and Edward Thrasher were chosen judges, which office they filled ably, giving entire satisfaction to all. Whilst counting was going on, people's faces turned pale, others looked for their dollars, and at the conclusion found that Mr. E. Dafoe's side stood 1,990, and Mr. Frank Sine's 7,465, losing by 2,525. It surprised him much, as he fully expected to win the day. After this they all sat down to tea, as Mr. Crawford in his usual good style had prepared a grand oyster supper for the wearied ones, which was well relished. Those standing at the head of the list were: S. Snider, 1,760; A. Ross, 1,325; M. Caldwell, 1,295; E. Dafoe, 900; Dr. Faulkner, 775. The best of feeling prevailed all through the evening, all enjoying themselves. By way of congratulations and sympathy, several ladies and gentlemen were present. The company dispersed at an early hour.—Con.

Coming to Stirling.

Do not forget that next Wednesday and Thursday there will be exhibited in Bennett's hall, Stirling, one of the most magnificent panoramic combinations ever shown in Ontario. The painting of Rev. J. T. Dowling is yet a "household word" in many homes in this village and township, where his qualities as a Christian gentleman and minister, and his abilities as an artist, are too well known to need mention here. Some seven or eight years ago, while living at Oakridge, he painted for a gentleman there a huge panorama of Oriental and Biblical scenery, consisting of forty large paintings, 8 x 12 feet each. Since removing to Colborne last winter, Mr. Dowling has secured the temporary use of the series from its owner, and has combined it with his paintings illustrating his lecture, "The Mosaic vision of creation," and the larger ones illustrating "Voices from the tabernacle," making one of the most magnificent displays ever shown. This he has entitled the "Grand Panoramic Combination of Oriental and Biblical Illustrations," and it comprises all told forty paintings 8 x 12 feet each in size, six 7 x 12 feet, and five 12 x 18 feet, or fifty-one in all. The forty mentioned are painted in Mr. Dowling's peculiar scenic style, and are even much superior as works of art to those exhibited in Stirling. The entertainment is not a lecture in any sense of the word, but just what its title indicates, and though but three or four minutes were devoted to each picture, the series could not possibly be run through in one evening, and necessarily covers two evenings. The admission for each evening will be 25c., or season tickets (good for both evenings) 40c., Children 15c, season tickets 25c. In the afternoon of Thursday, at 4:15, a children's matinee will be given to those school and other children will be admitted for the trifle of 10c each. Adults to matinee, 25c.

Rev. Dr. Wild, of Toronto, was present at the exhibition of this panorama at Colborne on Friday night last, and at the conclusion he at once rose and moved a very hearty vote of thanks, in which he said "the paintings were the most excellent of the kind he had ever seen," which is high praise from a competent authority.

Railway Extension North.

Since our last issue we learn that the surveying party are pushing on, and at the time we go to press will have reached L'Amable, having with little trouble pushed their way through the townships of Wollaston and Faraday. The instructions given by the executive committee we are informed was to go north in as direct a line as was feasible, reaching that section of the country where minerals are best known to exist, making Bancroft the objective point, and to reach that point in reasonably possible by L'Amable. The committee are strongly in favor of making the route a connecting one with the Canadian Pacific R. R. if they can succeed in getting sufficient and from the dominion government. We think this line is one that should also be aided by the Ontario government. We have had that promised when the $3,000 per mile was granted to the B. & N. H. R. The line will run through the government lands and timber and make them more valuable. More than that, a material portion of the revenue has been derived from this back country. It may be said that the Ontario Central has not been aided. True, not aided by a direct subsidy, but we would like to ask anyone who raises this objection what does it mean that the company through the influence of the promoters have secured from 15,000 to 20,000 acres of land at mere nominal prices, and that large sections have been withdrawn from sale to settlers—on the plea of not being suitable for settlement—simply, we are informed, to fall into the hands of the same company that is seeking to take away the mineral properties of Messrs. Chambers & Jenkins. If no bind else was given as a reason why this extension should be aided, this would be sufficient, in our own judgment, viz: that having given these lands—to the serious injury of the settlers in the neighborhood—to these monopolists, the Ontario government should protect its own interests by assisting in constructing a line in the interests of the people. With the strong committee appointed we expect success, and trust nothing will leave no stone unturned to secure a charter, subsidy and completion of the road. There is one or two things we should like to point out, 1st. The road can't go to every man's door, and we trust there will be no unreasonable expectations formed, as the committee will have to be governed very much by full engineer's report. 2nd. That it is desirable that so far as possible the interests of the villages of the north country should be considered, viz: Millbridge, L'Amable, Bancroft, etc. It will be in the interest of these villages, of the road, and of this village to do so.—Review.

Mr. Baltis Rose has so far recovered from the effects of the accident that he met with about three months since, that he is able to take out-door exercise.

The Vanderbilt family are regaled over the following anecdote: At Saratoga on one occasion, when sitting on the piazza of the Congress hall, a woman that overdressed lady approached and claimed his acquaintance. The commodore arose and talked affably with her, while his wife and daughter sniffed the air with scorn. "Father," said the young lady, as the commodore resumed his seat, "didn't you remember that vulgar Mrs. B. as the woman who used to sell poultry to us at house?" "Certainly," responded the old gentleman promptly, "and I remember your mother when she used to sell root beer at 3 cents a glass over in Jersey when I went up from Staten Island peddling oysters in my sloop." This is vouched for by a gentleman who heard the conversation.

Jonathan Vardey, of Seymour, received a very painful wound in the leg during the hunt after deer on North river. One of his companions in the chase was W. Davidson, and the two men had followed the deer to an arm of the river, where they stood opposite each other, a short distance apart. The deer came up out of the water and Vardey fired, but did not kill it. Immediately afterwards, as the deer bounded onward, Davidson discharged his rifle also, but unfortunately in a direct line with Vardey. The rifle was loaded with buckshot, two of which penetrated Vardey's leg, and tore the flesh into an ugly wound. The injury was so painful as to make the limb useless, and Vardey's companions assisted him to the camp, a distance of about three miles, where his wound was dressed.

The west town of Waupun has furnished a sensation. A married woman left her husband and child, donned male attire, courted a young lady, married her, and the two apparently lived happily thereafter, the wife absolutely refusing to be parted from her female husband. While there may be several drawbacks to a girl in having a husband of the same sex, there are many advantages. Men are after all such dull, stupid creatures, tuned to a lower key than the advanced female of the present day, that it is no wonder that the latter have to seek in their own sex that congeniality of spirit and sympathy of understanding that is denied them in the other. Then, what more could a lady woman ask for than a husband who never smokes, drinks, swears, slams the doors, stays out late at nights, who could grow enthusiastic over a fashion plate, and discuss feminine dress and its belongings with intelligence and appreciation?

"Why, Angelina, where did you get those beautiful rich colors on your bonnet?" "Ain't they lovely? I dyed them with the Triangle Package Dyes." 10c.

The young people of the Norwood Presbyterian church have formed themselves into a literary society. Their regular meetings will be held every second Tuesday evening, which will not be public. The time will be occupied in debates, essays, music, orations, recitations, readings, etc.

MARTIN LUTHER'S LIFE.

Some New and Interesting Facts about His Parents and His Career.

The approaching fourth centenary of the birth of Martin Luther, which is producing a crowd of books and pamphlets, has also brought to light a little volume of which there are probably not more than half a dozen copies in existence. It was published in Leipsic in the year 1705, and bears the title, "Life of Hans Luther and Margarethe Lindemanin, his Wife." It contains interesting information concerning the Reformer's parents and this early life that is not generally known, and cannot be found in other books.

About the year 1475 there lived in Mohra, a village of Saxe Meiningen, situated between Salmunya and Eisenach, a humble peasant, who afterwards became a miner. He was Hans Luther, the father of Martin Luther. He married a housekeeper Margarethe Lindemanin, who belonged to one of the oldest families of Eisenach, and married her about the year 1475. Strange enough, recorded what her age was at the time she entered the bonds of matrimony, but we learn from the little book above cited that "she was brought up by her parents in the fear of God, and as a good housekeeper," so that "she became possessed of many virtues which caused Hans to take her for his wedded wife, although she was but a poor girl."

The young couple soon after removed to Mansfeld, a neighboring town. We are told that Margarethe Luther, on Nov. 10, 1483—it being market day—had gone to Eiseben, now a town of Prussia Saxony, and that here she unexpectedly gave birth to a son,

WHO WAS NAMED MARTIN.

Many years after the Reformer had departed this life, there was created on the site of the humble house in which he was born, and which was standing in the year 1689, a public home for destitute orphans. This charitable institution for a long time found it very difficult to maintain its existence, until Frederick William III., King of Prussia, took it under his protection, and changed it into a "Luther Free School." Imposing edifice, the Teachers' Seminary, now stands immediately in rear of the old Luther house.

According to some writers, Hans Luther and his wife still lived in Mohra when their son Martin was born. On the other hand "Magister Nicolaus Beihahn" relates in his "Church History" that at that time they had already removed to Mansfeld.

We read that little Martin was already preferred to that "Hans and Grethe were very poor, but God had given them strong, healthy bodies, so that they were able to labor diligently, early and late." Hans unstiringly followed his vocation as a miner, while "his wife went to the neighboring woods to gather fire wood which she carried home on her back. Their son Martin tells that "his parents had no easy time of it, and suffered harder than people do when he was a man." We are also informed by him that "they were very severe to their children," of whom they had a large number. It is generally understood that Martin had one brother and four sisters, but the Reformer in his letters mentions this statement. He makes distinct mention of nine brothers-in-law, the husbands of his sisters. According to the little book which we have for our guide, the names of only one brother and four sisters are known, viz.: Jacob, Barbara, Dorothea, Maria, and Katharina. The names of the other brothers-in-law died with the plague are not known. The education of the children devolved upon the mother, who—Martin tells us—"had a hard task to perform, as his father had to be absent from home a great deal." In later years the Reformer expressed his satisfaction at having been brought up under although he mentions that his mother, while her intentions were best, was sometimes too strict; she did not know how to discriminate between the different characters of her children, and often punished those who deserved praise, and vice versa." Once she beat Martin "till the blood came for having taken a nut from the house shelf," and when he parents first took him to school—he was at that time so small that his father had to carry him there in his arms—the teacher was particularly urged to "see to be no lenient with Martin. This pedagogue made free use of the power thus granted him; he made flogged the poor boy fifteen times in a single afternoon. Martin became timid, and mentions that this rough and undeserved treatment caused a gloom to settle on his mind, which was never entirely dispelled, and in a measure became the cause of his entering the Augustinian Convent at Erfurt. The Reformer calls the German schools of those days purgatories, and the teachers tyrants.

It is well known that his parents had to suffer a great deal in consequence of the bold stand which the Reformer took, and through which at one time he became an outlaw both before Church and State. Evil-disposed persons did not hesitate to criminate his father and mother, and "the slanderous tongues not only of strangers, but of neighbors, caused their hearts much pain and soreness." But they bore their cross patiently, and found consolation in the fact that men like Melanchton were engaged upon the same task with their son." In order to fully comprehend the trying position they found themselves placed in when the Reformer entered into his conflict with the Pope, it must be borne in mind that they lived in an age of darkness and superstition, and they, too, were children of their time, and not free from its prejudices. Thus Martin Luther relates in "Table Talk" that his mother was sorely vexed and annoyed by a woman living in the neighborhood who was and that his mother had to do her utmost to gain the good will of this "witch," so that she should not bewitch her children. Melanchton praised Margarethe Luther as a woman upon whom all honest women might look as a model of true goodness and virtue. And when on the 25th of November, 1520, Melanchton was married, the plain woman, who at one time had carried firewood home on her back in order to prepare the humble meals for her family, was invited to the wedding, together with "her dear Hans." "Both were seated at the head of the table, where the guests of honor were sitting."

As a proof that the Reformer deeply loved his parents, it is said that he dedicated to his father the book he wrote about "Convent Life," and also that he was mindful of securing a lasting place for the memory of his parents by inserting their names in his "Book of Marriage Formulas," as follows: "Hans, wilt thou have Grethen for thy wedded wife?"

Martin Luther's parents were granted the blessing of seeing all their children in comfortable circumstances. Hans Luther in time became quite a prominent citizen of Mansfeld. "He acquired a house and a furnace, and was several times elected a member of the Town Council. His wife was no longer compelled to go to the woods in search of kindling wood; she led a comfortable life, surrounded by children and grandchildren, and peace and happiness reigned in their home." This state of affairs, however, was not to last long. On the 29th day of May, 1530, Margarethe Luther lost her husband, and "from that time forth she was no longer the same." The Reformer relates how "she grieved sorely until her summons, too, came." She died a year and one month after her husband, June 30, 1531. Martin's last presents to his daughter when she breathed her last. "Important duties which devolved upon him did not permit of his undertaking a long journey for the purpose of seeing his beloved mother once more, but he did not neglect his duty as a good child, and addressed to her an affectionate letter."

The beginning and conclusion of this interesting little epistle read as follows:

MY DEARLY BELOVED MOTHER: I have received a letter from my brother Jacob apprising me of your sickness, and am very sorry that I cannot be with you personally, as I would like to be. . . . May the father and God of all consolation through His holy word and Spirit grant you a firm, happy, and grateful faith, so that you may overcome this and all affliction, and arrive at the conviction that He speaks the truth when he says: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." I herewith recommend your body and soul to His mercy. Amen. All the children and my Katie pray for you. Some weep, some cut, saying, "Grandmother is very sick." God's grace be with you, and will to you all.

Your affectionate son,

HINDUSTANI MEAT CURRIES.

The following recipe for curry powder will be found, after trial, to recommend itself for its simplicity, economy, and containing all that is essential. Any additions can subsequently be made as individual experience or fancy may suggest. 1. Coriander seed, parched, and husks separated, eight ounces; 2. Turmeric parched, scraped, and sliced, four ounces; 3. Cumin seed, husks separated, 2 ounces; 4. Fenugreek, one ounce. The above are to be well ground, and then thoroughly mixed.

Oriental dishes, with few exceptions, are prepared in sufficiently small morsels to permit of their being eaten with the fingers without the aid of knife, fork, or spoon. When, however, this cannot be avoided, as in the case of joints, or large pieces of joints, the meat is cooked just long enough to allow of its being separated from the bone by the fingers, without being stewed to rags.

Indeed, the whole art of curry and pilau making consists in correct cooking and skimming process. It is removed off the fire too soon, the meat, though done, will be tough, and the spices will have had time to permeate the tissues while, again, if too much cooked, the disintegration of the fibres will have caused the spices to sink into the gravy, and therefore in either cases a failure will be the inevitable result. A curry properly cooked must hit the happy mean between these two extremes, yet ought to be able to be eaten with a spoon and fork only, which is the practice amongst Europeans in India.

The next rule to be borne in mind is the correct dressing of the meat which is to be used in the curry, whether fowl, fish, etc., must be cut into dice not larger than an inch square. 2 Poultry, partridges, etc., should be jointed, separate the wings and legs into two parts at the joints, and the backs crosswise, according to size, into three or four, and the merry-thought separated; it may as well be stated that two smaller birds are preferable to one large. 3. Hares and rabbits according to size, ought to have the legs and back cut into three or four pieces, and the backs crosswise into eight or nine. 4. Pigeons' wings and legs whole, and backs in two. 5. Small birds, as quails, larks, etc., in two, lengthwise.

CHICKEN CURRY (BENGAL FASHION).—Materials.—A small fowl (a cock) weighing six onions about an inch in diameter, four ounces of butter, one small clove of garlic chopped fine, one ounce of green chillies (taking which, three dried birds-eye chillies) chopped fine, a heaped table-spoonful and a half of the curry-powder prepared from foregoing receipt, and half a lemon. Mode.—Slice the onions fine, take a third of them and fry with half the butter till crisp and of a nice golden color; drain them carefully from all superfluous grease, and put them aside. Then fry the chicken, cut up as directed, in the remainder of the butter left from the last operation; when the meat is slightly colored, put also aside. Now take a saucepan, put into it the curry-powder and the remaining half of the butter, let it fry for two or three minutes, stirring occasionally, then throw in the uncooked onions. Analgamate well with the contents of the saucepan, and after they have fried for a few minutes add the stock, chillies, salt, and garlic; let it boil with the liquor reduce to one-third of its original quantity, the cover of the pan being drawn slightly aside to enable the steam to escape. When it has reduced, add the chicken. Allow the whole to boil briskly for a couple of minutes; then place it on the edge of the hob to simmer gently till cooled, stirring the curry frequently to enable the meat to take up the gravy. In about twenty minutes it ought to be cooled, the general guide is to observe the appearance of the drumsticks: if the bones are found protruding by the flesh having shrunk, it is done. Finally, the piece of lime, the salt, the fried onions, which have been put aside from the first operation, must be added to the contents of the saucepan, and the whole quickly stirred, after which no time should be lost in serving the curry.

CHICKEN CURRY (MADRAS FASHION).—Materials.—Exactly the same as in the foregoing, but substituting an equal quantity of milk or buttermilk in place of the stock, and having in addition an ounce of ground flour. Mode.—Proceed to fry and put aside one-third of the onions, as in the last receipt. Now rub the curry powder and the ounce of flour into a thin paste, with a little of the milk or buttermilk, as may be the case, then add the remainder of the onions, the garlic, salt, and chillies, gradually stirring the whole up into a stiff paste with more milk. Boil the second half of the butter in a saucepan, put in the curry paste and, add by them cook briskly for seven or eight minutes, stirring constantly, and scraping off the paste which may adhere to the bottom and sides of the pan, and adding milk in small quantities from time to time to prevent burning, and in the manner expending all the milk. When the meat is nearly cooked (which can be ascertained by the rule stated in the last recipe) add the fried onions and lemon juice, stir well, and serve.

CHICKEN CURRY (CEYLON FASHION).—Materials.—The same as the first recipe, except only two onions and half an ounce of butter are required, and a breakfast-cupful of cocoa-nut milk must be substituted for the stock. The cocoa-nut milk is extracted from the cocoa-nut in the following manner: put the kernel, after paring away all the black outer rind, into a mortar, and reduce it to a pulp; put this into a deep vessel and pour boiling water over it till the whole is covered, let it stand for ten minutes, then strain off the liquor, i. e., the cocoa-nut milk, put back the pulp, and repeat the process till sufficient milk has been obtained. Mode.—Chop the onions, slice the garlic, rub a pulp in the mortar, fry the curry-powder, onions, garlic, and chillies in a saucepan with the butter, stirring all the while; in two or three minutes add the chicken, cut up as elsewhere mentioned; when the meat is of a golden color, put in the garlic and cocoa-nut milk, and let them simmer on a slow fire for half an hour, or till cooked. The lemon may or may not be omitted, to give the final touch.

The three foregoing recipes may be considered as typical illustrations to explain the modus operandi of dealing with curries in various parts of India. With the same quantity of condiments, &c., a duck, partridge, three pigeons, and sixteen larks, the same number of larks, or one and a half pounds of beef, mutton, veal, pork, or fish, may be made into a Bengal, Madras, or Cingalese curry. A hare or rabbit will require a couple more onions and a half teaspoonful of the curry powder, etc.

The time required in cooking will be more or less in some instances; but as the surest guide for ascertaining when the meat is done has already been pointed out, it would be needless waste of space to enlarge on the subject in each case. In fish curries the pan must be stirred as little as possible, to prevent the flakes breaking up.

The above recipes are for gravy curries. If a dry one is preferred, the liquor must be reduced to one-fourth instead of one-third previous to adding the boiled onions, otherwise the process is the same in each instance.

The first weather report—Thunder.

A Lafayette lady—a model wife and mother—broke her husband of the saloon habit by walking up to the bar beside him and calling for the beer. She broke the awful silence, as they walked home, with the remark: "I love you, my husband, and if you are going to hell I'm going right along with you."

A RESTLESS SPIRIT.

A Genuine Jersey Ghost.

A crowd of superstitious and trembling countrymen and villagers gathered the other evening on the outskirts of the town of Jackson, N. Y., for the purpose of investigating the report that the ghost of a Mrs. Dietrich, the former occupant of the cottage near by who recently committed suicide by hanging, nightly made its appearance in her bed room and that the moans and groans could be distinctly heard. While the party waited patiently for the "ghost to walk" an old gray haired man, who looked more, over, had not lost its glimmer, detailed to those who were not familiar with the dead woman's history some interesting portion of her life.

Mrs. Anna Dietrich, a woman of good family, was extremely prepossessing and before her marriage had been known in the town where she resided as "the village belle of Jackson." After the death of her husband at Jackson she still lived at that place respected and liked by the entire populace. About a year ago she fell a victim to the wiles of a "handsome stranger," who afterwards disappeared. Four months ago a child was born, the scandal was a great surprise and shock. With the charity usually displayed in small places for such unfortunates absolution was extended to the woman and she pointed out as a social leper, and her life was thus rendered unendurable. The day preceding her self-destruction a well known woman slammed a door in her face, after first ordering her from the house.

Mrs. Dietrich returned home, and the next day was found hanging by the neck, dead in her barn. Just as the narrator had concluded, a sudden gust of wind slammed a shutter on the bed room window and a swinging limb, which while motionless excluded the moonlight from the bed, and of light for a moment fall upon the group.

"Fore God, there is Mrs. Anna!" exclaimed the historian, hurrying off down the lane. His example was followed by a few of the more timid.

THE GHOST'S DISCOVERER.

Those who remained were assured by a man living on the place, named "Wash Walter (the original discoverer of the ghost), that it had not yet appeared. His story, which was soon known throughout the county, and repeated to a Times reporter, was not present. It is to the effect that on a recent night, as he was walking in front of the dead woman's house, he heard a moan, which appeared to come from the loft. The sounds of distress continued for an hour, difficulty in entering the house. Ascending to the dead woman's bed room he says he felt a match, which, although the air without was perfectly still, was immediately blown out by a sudden puff. He then lit several matches, with the same result, and, becoming nervous, was about to leave the house, when a vague, uncertain light filled the apartment, which, upon growing brighter, as it gradually increased, revealed the form of Mrs. Dietrich, kneeling, with her hands clasped in a supplicating manner. Her hair was streaming down her back.

HOW THE GHOST DISCLOSED HERSELF.

Spellbound, the intruder could not move, he says, but manfully witnessed the deliberate action of the apparition as it unwound the rope from the rafter, and fastened one end over the open door, shaped the other end into a noose, then stepped upon a chair and placing her head in the noose, suspended by the neck in the air. The misty light that pervaded the room then gradually faded away, and when darkness again reigned the astonished spectator, stricken witless of the blood-curdling occurrence says he rushed out of the building with a yell.

The reporter waited for the manifestation of the ghostly presence, but in vain. Whether or not the ghost story owes its origin to an overheated imagination of a discoverer's mind, or is told by him as a vainglorious joke, it is generally credited, and a few firm believers in spooks are in favor of exposing the house to the public and turning slightly aside to enable the steam to escape. When it has reduced, add the chickens. Allow the whole to boil briskly for a couple of minutes; then place it on the edge of the hob to simmer gently till cooled, stirring the curry frequently to enable the meat to take up the gravy. In about twenty minutes it ought to be cooled, the general guide is to observe the appearance of the drumsticks: if the bones are found protruding by the flesh having shrunk, it is done. SCIENCE.

A perpetual clock was started at Brussels a little over a year ago. An up draft is obtained by a tube, or shaft exposed to the sun; this draft turns a fan which winds up the weight of the clock until it reaches the top, when it actuates a brake that notices the fan, but leaves it free to start again after the weight has gone down a little. At the foot of June the clock was running perfectly after having been in motion for nine consecutive months.

Very unusual natural phenomena often excite surprise and sometimes alarm. Some travellers walking along the shore of Loch Ness, in Inverness, Scotland, noticed that they cast a double shadow. The explanation was simple when the facts were explained. A well-defined shadow was produced by the direct rays of the sun, and a fainter one by the sun's reflected rays from the lake, which happened at the time to be quite still and mirror-like.

A writer in Les Mondes says it is generally acknowledged that the ages of trees may be ascertained by the number of concentric lingneous layers or "rings," each layer corresponding to the growth of a year. This principle does not apply to tropical and equatorial trees, as is shown by the following facts: M. Chareney visited the ruins of Palenque, in Mexico in 1857 and again in 1881. On one occasion he cut off the branch of a tree which he judged by its size to be about 18 months old, but he found eighteen concentric layers. On his first expedition the party cut down several trees to get at the pyramid. The mould has now accumulated which must, of course, all be of the same age—22 years. On one of these M. Charencey counted no fewer than 230 concentric layers.

In the Western states many mills, called arastras are used by small miners who have only sufficient water for drinking purposes and to moisten the ore operated on, can be purchased. The mill is made by a large upright wheel which is driven by the sand, a great pile which is raked up to the works. A wooden shaft is then constructed, a great number of buckets, and these carry the sand up to a big tank, just as grain elevators carry wheat to the flouring mill. A stream of water, and being let out over the overshot wheel, it revolves just as it would under the weight of a stream of water, and the arastras move in a circle and do the work. Water is a much wind, sand is stored up for use when calm prevails, so the arastras are never idle. After a sufficient quantity of sand has accumulated there is no trouble on that score, the same sand being used over and over.

Alcohol as a Remedy.

I do not intend to deny that the use of mild alcoholic tonics, as a substitute for the frightful remedies of the medical Sangrados, is a decided improvement, but alcohol is only a lesser evil, a first step of a progressive reform. Alcohol lingers in our hospitals as slavery lingered in the West Indies, as the witchcraft delusion lingers in Southern Europe. Has Alcohol any remedial value whatever? Let us consider the matter from a purely medical standpoint. Does alcohol protect from malarial fevers? It is a well-known fact that the human organism cannot withstand two diseases at the same time. Rhaumatism can be temporarily relieved by producing an artificial inflammation, a headache yields to a severe toothache. For the same reason the alcohol fever affords a temporary protection from other febrile symptoms—i. e., a man might fatally his system against chills and agues by keeping himself constantly under the stimulating influence of alcohol. But sooner or later stimulation is followed by depression, and during that reaction the other fever gets a chance, and rarely misses it. The history of epidemics proves that pyretic diseases are from eight to twenty times more destructive among drunk-drinkers than among the temperate classes; rich or poor, young or old, abstainers are only intermediated by diseases that decimate drunkards. On no other point is the testimony of physicians of all ages, all climates, and all countries more consistent and unanimous.

Is alcohol a peptic stimulant? No more than Glauber's salt or castor oil. The system behaves to the effect of the poisonous substance; the bowels are thrown into a state of morbid inactivity. The effect of every stimulative is followed by a corresponding reaction and the habitual use of peptic stimulants leads to a chronic constipation which yields only to purgatives of the most virulent kind.

Does alcohol impart strength? Does it benefit the exhausted system? If a worn out horse drinks on the highway, we may rouse it by sticking a knife into its ribs, but, after staggering ahead for a couple of minutes, it will drop again, and the second delirium will be more fatal than the first, just as much as the brutal stimulus has still further exhausted the little remaining strength. The man who habitually indulges in brandy rallies the exhausted energies of the human body. The prostrate vitality rises between the fog, and the sunbeams have energy till the poison is expelled. Then comes the reaction, and, before the patient can recover, his organism has to double work, and he has to repair both the original cause of the disease and the effect of the stimulant. Alcohol has no remedial value. But that was not the point I wished not for the positive mischief which the wretched poison is liable, and very liable, to cause.

Why Divorce is so Common To-Day.

This generation sees divorce more frequent, not because men and women are more wicked than the ancients, but because life has made more difficult by the excitement and complexity and manifold strains of modern life, which render unhappy marriages more unendurable. A broad gap opens between the hot present and the still quiet of other days, when the husband was the type of a steady and continuous round of work, when no avenue in life but marriage opened before young women, and when the young women passed lives from which excitement, worry and the anxious rush of the day were absent. Any candid man who will reconstruct the life of sixty years ago will be convinced that, while that day had in it much of secret wickedness—as court and church records show—the conditions much less likely to prevent two people from leading quiet, uneventful and reasonably happy lives together.—Philadelphia Press.

A Curious Swiss Lawsuit

A curious case, in which an Englishman is concerned, is pending before the courts at Lausanne. It began in a little case. A the cat fled down an air shaft leading from the second into a wine vault; the dog followed, and both of them fell in. It has cost a large cask of Yvorne, not very securely tapped, and either the dog or the cat knocking up against it, the wine ran out in a steady flow. The wine merchant clearly had a cause of action for the loss of his wine, and the landlord in turn had a good and tenant for the damage done by the mess. But who is to blame on the other side, the owner of the dog or the owner of the cat? It is not fortunately for the Englishman who owns the dog, the cat (like so many of the species) is an "unappreciated blessing," and the wine merchant has laid his action in consequence against the owner of the dog.

Our Dead.

Oh, the boys. Yet when we are ready to give them over and ask ourselves in sheer despair, if they will never learn by cuffs and lines to stand in awe of anything, all at once we see them hushed and tender at the bedside of a sick mother, risking life and limb to bring her wild flowers, and softening into tears at the mention of her name. What an unaccountable contradiction our boy is! What an amiable sock for! What an irreverent saint! Shall we preserve the type? Well, I was a boy once myself.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

Mr. Henry Irving thus speaks of the stage, past and present:

I remember critics have said that good acting died when modern stage-setting was born. That there are no stub actors now, they can be no such actors as Fitzhugh and Taylor, because they drew inspiration from the fountain-head so to speak. Did those critics ever consider what we have lost in the course not; but I doubt not that they would have been very glad to have it. I am content with a boy Rosalind, may look back to the theatre of past days to see how little it would please the public to day. How should we like a boy Rosalind played by a half-shaven boy, with a shrill, piping voice and the angularity of a boy's gesture? How could a boy invest the part with the amount of grace and softness which we consider essential? If the public of Shakespeare's day was content with a boy Rosalind, may we not suppose that the performance of that day as a whole would wholly fail to satisfy our audiences of to-day? Then, I contend that Shakespeare constantly fretted under the poverty-stricken stage upon which he had to act his plays. On the contrary, Henry V., he laments the makeshifts with which he had to content himself. The same old cry of the slaves of tradition has always been trammelling the player's art. When Betterton substituted a painted background, in place of the hitherto drop of a green stuff or absurd tapestry, he was set down and criticised as a dangerous innovator. I hold that we are the exponents of that can be done to heighten the illusion without distracting the attention of the spectator from the scene and the player. Marcady did wonders for the stage, and successfully; he went so far as to make the birds sing and the bees hum in the forest of Arden. Henry Kean allowed the ballet master to play too much of a part. When you magnify the means you do not always magnify the end I say stop. But up to that point I find nothing to apologize for.

Here is the pen and ink portrait of the famous English actor:

His complexion is swarthy and his face is so varied in its expression that it is difficult to convey an accurate description of its many changes. His hair is black and long; his eyes dark grey, and his height is slightly under six feet. His shoulders are heavy, his figure is well proportioned and his tout ensemble is thoroughly artistic. Mr. Irving's features are not distinguished by the portrayal of Mr. Oscar Wilde, but he is a more refined edition of the familiar type of that eccentric genius of a dilettante. Mr. Irving's smile is peculiarly fascinating. His eyebrows are black and heavy, his forehead is receding, but the lower portion of his face is decidedly of a classic cast. His mouth is large but shapely. He wears his hair parted slightly to one side. His manner of walking, however, is stagey. He moves, or rather "struts" as he moves, with a forward inclination of the body, as if he were about to seize the person whom he addresses.

Mr. Henry Irving made his first appearance before a New York audience on Monday night in the character of "Dr. Dudley." That night was a miserable one, the rain falling in torrents, but the audience was, nevertheless, the most fashionable and distinguished ever seen in a New York theatre, and the social welcome accorded the great actor on his appearance was the most hearty which, by one of the most brilliant triumphs that any artist from abroad has stepped upon. The impersonation of Mathias the Sun says "It is one of the most distinct and striking characterizations that our stage has seen, thrilling in its intensity, and at moments terrible in its power. It is a study of human self-torture and agonizing despair. The conviction of these matters that is reached is complete. No matter what may be thought of the singularity of the actor's stage personality, of his idiosyncrasies of utterance, of gesture, and of movement, the impression of his manhood and of his intellectuousness, and of the refinement and finish of his performance remains unclouded and undisturbed."

At Jena last week, a new drama by Otto Davrient, was produced with immense success. It is entitled "Luther," and is called an historical characterization in seven scenes. It tells the story of Luther's life very completely and dramatically, and is remarkable for the skill with which the scenes One hundred and twelve people took part in the play, which lasted from 3.30 to 9 p.m. The scenery was artistic and striking, and the impersonation of the character of Luther by Davrient, the author, Katherina by the Fraulein Kuhlman of the Weimar Court Theatre, and others, received great applause.

Marie Antoinette's harp has come to light in a Boston second hand store. It was made for the Queen's valet, carried it off as a souvenir, but, being reduced to great poverty, he was forced to part with it, and sold it to a lady of Princeton, who has passed it around among various hands. The harp is richly inlaid with ivory, and still bears the name of the maker.

William Stafford the young tragedian is making an excellent reputation this season. He is now playing in Pennsylvania, and is being greeted with enthusiasm.

Usury.

Our English ancestors thought that it was shameful and unchristian to demand pay for the use of money. While they never denied that the loan of money was a good service, they made statutes to limit the amount. In time their views changed, and they saw that it was just that a borrower should pay for the use of money borrowed of him, if the charge, called interest, was not exhorbitant.

A trader who borrows money to use in his business, and thereby increases his profits, ought to pay for the use of the money just as he pay a fee for the use of a horse or a house.

In nearly all countries the rate of interest is fixed by law. In commercial countries it is also the rule that any rate of interest can be given and accepted, if the borrower can pay it is made in writing. The reason for this is that the value of money like the value of any commodity is fixed by law, and that when money is scarce, and low when it is plenty. It is right that the dealer in money should have the same advantages as the dealer in any other article.

To make or agree to take unlawful interest is usury. If taken unintentionally, or by mistake, the agreement is binding at the lawful rate.

Money-lenders resort to many expedients to evade the law. Some of those are ingenious. A lender may deduct the interest from the face-value of the note, thus obtaining a advance.

An agreement that a year shall be twelve months of thirty days each, for computing interest may be enforced if it is taken if expressly agreed upon, but the interest must be asked for when it falls due.

A lender may charge for borrow the money he advances, may charge for the trouble of raising it. The courts, however, always watch such cases with suspicion.

When a man borrows money to use in a business, the lender may charge more than the lawful rate. He has a right to receive pay for the money he loans. It is wrong to fail to buy up a note in the money-market for less than its face value.

The laws against usury do not apply to loans of anything except money. Any sum may be charged for lending articles of commerce.

Mortgages are worse than usury in the hands of the parties who make them. In some places, notes bearing usurious interest are not given into the hands of strangers who bought without knowing them to be so tainted. Nearly everywhere, however, an honest holder can obtain his money.

Modern laws have made the usury regulations of little account. To-day in civilized lands, they are only a curiosity of ancient legislation.

Velveteen is an exploded name; all velvet pile stuffs take the general name of velvet.

Young lady: The word "call" in poke has a different significance from what it does in society. In poke, if your opponent "calls" you have got to "see" him, without any excuse of sickness or "not at home."

John Bright on Temperance.

We select the following pointed sentences from John Bright's speech on temperance at his opening the Cobden Coffee Rooms in Birmingham lately:

I had been in bad health, but I found it prejudical to me alcohol in that way (a medicinal stimulant).

I have been in the habit for the last more than ten years I suppose—of entire abstinence from all these things. . . . I. . . Now, you all know what I am and what abstinence reformers should now consider, is some plan which will unite the temperance feeling of the country and give it power, and make its advance and progress possible.

I recollect hearing Cobden say more than once, that although he was of the habit, as almost all people were in his time, of taking a glass or two of wine occasionally, yet perhaps either at dinner—still I have heard him say more than once that whenever he was driven by hard work, or of much speaking or of much writing, he found it was far better for him to abstain from wine altogether, and that he could perform his work better without it than with it.

Houses such as this, established all over the country, in all towns and in some of the considerable villages, must have results highly beneficial to the moral and conduct of the people. For generations the people have been so accustomed to the consumption of alcoholic, intoxicating or strong drink, that one kind of refreshment that the idea of refreshment or enjoyment among the millions is inseparable from the consumption of those things. Therefore, temperance coffee houses are a new discovery and are hailed with pleasure.

Some people have an idea that this mischief (intemperance) is a mischief that affects only what are termed the working classes. Nothing can be a greater mistake. I believe there is sympathy with those who wish for this reformation is required for the multitude who are not ranged among the classes ordinarily designed as "working classes." Probably of fact, very class supplies victims to the terrible temptation of drink; and, indeed, from experience—and I suppose we are all experience of others must be much the same—there are very few families in this country whose members cannot point to some persons nearly or not remotely connected with them who have fallen victims to this terrible evil.

I may say, then, that I am not without hope. I believe the wisdom of Parliament may do something—may, indeed, do much; I believe that the Christian Churches may do much; I believe that the public opinion which is now in progress in all parts of the kingdom will tell largely even upon the present growing up generation; and with this combination of the wisdom of Parliament, the energy and zeal of the churches, and the effect of the educational movements, I think that we may hope at some day to banish from our country, or rather to make within, an evil which darkens so many homes with sorrow and despair. There are men who say "You cannot make people sober by act of Parliament." Well, that is a question which I will not discuss, but I have no doubt whatever that by act of Parliament you can remove to a very considerable extent the temptation which meets men now at almost every step of their lives.

Good Advice.

Don't be whining about not having a fair chance. There is scarcely a man but a window he'll fall on his feet and ask the nearest way to his work. The more you have to begin with, the less you will have to unlearn when you come to yourself; a much brighter than any you can get out of dead men's bags. A scant breakfast in the morning of life whets the appetite for the feast of life at its close. He who has tasted a sour apple will have the more relish for a sweet one. Your present want will make future prosperity all the sweeter. Eighteen-pence has set up many men who have become rich. Many a man of ever until he has kept his carriage. As for the place you are cast in, don't find fault with that; you need not be a slave to any man or woman. Rise yourself! Be a man! Be a man! Be a man

Paris affects English fashions at the moment.

Mouse ellen on tight waists remain in favour.

Steel soutaches appears among metallic braids.

The "Star" kid glove is the latest fancy of fashion.

There is a return of favour to clinging dress drapery.

Steel soutaches in gray velvet is considered very chic.

Silk costumes are relegated to home and carriage wear.

Jonquil green combines with black, navy, or deep red.

Silk flounces are vandyked, scalloped, and sometimes pinked.

Basques, as a mode, are short, and are pointed both back and front.

Brides on the Continent no longer wear gloves at the ceremony.

The name Rose is given to a very handsome new long poplin.

Black stockings remain the first favorites of fashionable women.

Balmoral skirts are wider, but the yoke about the hips is invariable.

The silk, satins, and brocades of this season are daintily beautiful.

It is quite fashionable to wear a fancy tie in the bonnet bow under the chin.

A Parisian costume of pigeon gray is trimmed with the plumage of the blue jay.

Of all the forms of the feminine waistcoat that of fur bids fair to be most popular.

The sabot sleeve, fell its whole length, and so popular in England, is gaining favor in Paris.

Colored flannel skirts edged with woollen lace are preferred to white ones or balmorals.

Parisian dressmakers discard all sleeves except the close coat sleeve for street costumes.

Waistcoats of all kinds, surpirnos d on the bodice or corsage, grow more and more popular.

Silk cardigan jackets will be worn under dressy cloaks for extra warmth as the season advances.

Fetiche waistcoats are sometim s made of black and white Spanish lace or Escurial lace scarfs.

Parisians are combining velvet with Victorienne, Sicilienne, and Bengaline for carriage costumes.

The jersey is condemned by the Princess of Wales, but it enjoys high favor in Paris and in New York.

Galignani's Messenger very pertinently asks, if English taste in dress is bad, why do the French copy it?

Tucks are used to excess by some dressmakers, even velvet flounces being trimmed with two or three tucks.

All dressy silk dresses have waistcoats. These are of soft silk or satin on heavy cloth and velvet costumes.

Some of the new greens combine beautifully with other colors, and are becoming alike to the dark and the fair.

Velvet flounces have deep hems, which are so heavily stitched as to be plainly visible even when the flounces are thickly pleated.

Velvet dresses are full, but in the more elegant costumes they are made so by extra breadths of the material and not by the flounces.

Imported cloth suits are elaborately made of several contrasting materials, such as cloth and velvet, cloth and satin or Sicilienne.

Flat gold braid, put on in embroidery or in rows, forms the decrative effect on many handsome tailor-made cloth and velvet dresses.

The Breton waistcoat, profusely embroidered, and frequently ornamented with coins and medals, is worn in Paris by women of taste.

Moss green in the cloth combines with golden brown velvet, in the velvet with pale blue, and all of the grays except Russian and slate.

Astrakhan is very much in vogue; even large Astrakhan collars lined with red plush are being made to be worn up against the ears in the Russian fashion.

The majority of imported Paris dresses are very much trimmed, but the plain, youthful costumes of the English and American artists are much more admirable and admired.

Flounces of Oriental and Escurial lace adorn the fronts of handsome dinner and reception dresses, and these flounces are scantily pleated over bias folds of velvet in the same or contrasting colors to the dress.

While English women of exacting taste, such as the Princess of Wales, the Countess of Lonsdale, are ordering their dresses from Parisian dres makers, the fair French women who leads in the world of Parisian society are ordering theirs of English tailors.

Landseer's Retriever.

Sir Edwin Landseer is accredited with the full owing bon mot in regard to the popularity of several retriever dogs was being discussed in his presence. "Not one yet mentioned comes up to mine," said he, "and thus. Upon a certain occasion I showed him a first-round note of a well known country town band, near to which I was residing. I rolled up the note, put it in my pocket, walked into the wood, hid it in the trunk of a tree, then strolled on for a mile or so, the dog at my heels. 'Pick, fetch, and bring to Power?' I said, and the dog was off like a shot. I waited, and waited, and waited for a considerable time; but no Power. Presently, however, he came—but without the note. 'Hi back, find and bring,' I repeated, 'or you shall whip at least a week more.' But instead of doing my bidding the animal came quite close to me and dropped from his mouth at my feet, one after the other, five brandlow golden sovereigns. He had not only found the note, sirs, but had gone to the bank and exchanged it. The intelligence of my retriever celebrated, Power, celebrated pointer Mr. Jingle, of Pickwickian renown, once possessed."

Underground Russia.

Underground Russia has a bold, and for the most part vigorous, political press. The printers of Land and Liberty have, since they have issued fifteen proclamations and pamphlets; those of the Will of the People claim to have put into circulation two periodicals and thirteen proclamations, or in all 52,000 separate printed sheets. Abroad, the revolutionary press of Russian anarchists issued 3,600 copies and two appeals to the people, while the Forward party published eight pamphlets and two appeals to the people, making altogether 34,500 copies. The circulation of the Will of the People is said to vary from 1,500 to 3,000 of each number, while the Alarm Bell is distributed every month to 1,500 persons. This may be thought a small circulation, when regard is had to the eagerness with which publications of this kind are read all over Russia, not only by those actually belonging to secret societies, but also by people who either sympathize with conspiracy or merely look upon it as spectators. On the other hand it must be remembered that forbidden literature of this kind is carefully passed from hand to hand, so that a copy reaches no fewer at the lowest estimate, than a hundred readers. And when the perils of printing and distribution are called to mind, it will be at once seen that "2,000 copies" is a circulation not small, but dangerously large.

Evening.

When evening's quiet shades
Around my head are thrown,
Adown the silent glade,
I wander forth alone.
Then every thing is calm
And soothing to my breast;
A sweet and holy balm
Dispels the vague unrest.

Then, gently o'er me stealing,
Come many an inspired thought,
Embued with untold feeling,
With manly virtue fraught,
Away with toil and care,
Day claims these as its own,
But evening's hours are
Should breathe but peace alone.

It is the hour of love,
And I could marry beams
Shine from the vaults above
Upon the poet's dreams.
It is the hour of praise,
And oriisons arise,
Float through the rosy air
To God in the skies.

Cool zephyrs tan my cheek,
And o'er my temples rove,
While voices sweet as speech
Keep every sheltered grove;
Blend hour by hour in music
A balm to ev ery wound,
Then gently steal every care,
And stillness reigns around.

Remote from all the noise
Of busy revelry,
And all the false alloys
Of man's society,
Tis sweet to be alone,
How sweet, and how sincere,
When Nature's every tone
Falls softly on the ear!

—INA QUICKSLOW.

BLACK SPIRITS AND WHITE.

BY SOPHIE SWETT.

"The very in which Anstice says "Charley is a violent revolution.

"What do you think of that, Mary?" she says, as I am silent.

"It sounds to me like great nonsense, say I, bluntly.

Anstice regards me with an expression of horror. "Mary, I am ashamed of you," she says, gently, "You don't seem to realize, dear, that it is—that it must be—a communication from our Charley's spirit."

"No, I don't realize it," say I, "I should not be able to do that if I believed it. I don't think I believe it."

"I wish I could help believing it," says Anstice. "I have racked my brain over Dr. Felix's theory, and it does seem so far-fetched and unreasonable. I have tried so hard to think I really wrote myself. I have thought that after holding a pencil in one position for any length of time, the muscles become weary and the pencil wavers, and almost any movement forms something like a letter. I said aloud one day, 'Now I believe I do it myself,'—I didn't, Mary, but I wanted to, so very much,—and instantly the pencil wrote, 'Joking my hand along. 'Are you take great pains to prove yourself a humbug, don't you?'

"I suppose it is only the same thing that those people whom they call writing 'mediums do,' say I.

"But I never thought they made it. I never dreamed there was anything it," says Anstice.

"Great many people have written with Planchette without knowing it, I suppose, as you do," say I. "I am aware that my arguments are not weighty, but they are the best that I have at hand.

"Yes; Sarah Sibley was talking to me about it last week,—said her sister Alice could write with Planchette on a white marble stand and the pencil wrote furiously. She didn't seem to consider the mystery of it at all."

"Some people don't like mysteries," say I. "I have a preference for the advice of people in the flesh."

"Anstice looks deeply pained at my frivolity.

"I don't for a moment believe that our mother's spirit comes back to write such nonsense as this," say I, "and I think it a pity of all my ancestors should command me to to marry Dr. Felix I would not do it."

"Will that I leave her. It seems cruel, but we are not in sympathy; she will never convince my practical mind arguing from so unsubstantial a basis, and I have no theory to offer in place of hers.

I go down to the library and take from a closet a small pasteboard box. Large black letters on its white cover announce "Planchette; the Despair of Science." I take from it an innocent-looking piece of board molded, upon four wheels. I break it up with an energy born of wrath, and throw the pieces upon the glowing coals of the grate. But as the flames leap upon it the pencil flies out it roller to my very feet. I fancy that it looks up at me with a grin of Bendah triumph. My brain whirls. I feel that I am on the way to Bedlam! I behink me of Mary Steyner's refuge from the uncanny, and begin to repeat the multiplication table. But, unhappily, at times it is not my strong point. I do not feel sure that seven times nine are sixty three. I rush into the open air.

A week has gone by. We have had an influx of visitors, and have been unusually gay. Anstice has but little time to consult the spirits, and I am very glad that it is so; but I watch in vain to see the color back in her cheeks. She is fitfully gay, but she is heavy-eyed, and I have seen traces of tears upon her face.

Dr. Felix retires to solitude as soon as his duties with Uncle Rufe are over, and we see little of him. I have a suspicion that he is "investigating" in the interests of science, and see a vision of him sitting in a rapt state with a pencil between his fingers, as I have seen him in the library.

Square box comes by mail for him, and I feel sure by certain that, when the wrapper is taken off, "Planchette, the Despair of Science," will be disclosed. Science may despair, but so long as the power of investigation remains to him, Dr. Felix will not.

I do not suspect him of any mysterious influence over Anstice, because I am sure that if he possessed it he would forget to use it in his zeal for investigating it. Mary Steyner thinks that he flees society because he does not like the sight of other men's attentions to Anstice.

But Anstice receives the attentions of all men with an utter indifference that ought to gladden my heart, but no! Poor Frederick, however, he came—but without the note. "Hi back, find and bring, I repeated, 'or you shall whip at least a week more.' But instead of doing my bidding the animal came quite close to me and dropped from his mouth at my feet, one after the other, five brandlow golden sovereigns. He had not only found the note, sirs, but had gone to the bank and exchanged it. seldom permits himself to have any expression of contempt, there is a mild wonder upon his face as he mounts the box and says, quietly, "Our railroad station, you said, sir?"

"Yes; we're going home," says Anstice.

By the light of the carriage lamp I try to decipher the writing on the crumpled paper which the hands now. In the case of those terrible ghosts I dared not look the sight of which I dreamed.

I read:

"Dear Wyncope Bridge will strictly adhere the express instructions—surburban at eight tonight. Charley is on board.

My first emotion is one of pleasure, not terror. I have been so startled by Anstice's mysterious excitement that I am all ready to speak of my own free will. But the blank moment I look to Anstice a second face and sees a reproachful, and even a smile. "Anstice, I ask, with a look, when you remember how much that was false, and nonsensical, do you believe I told in this way?"

"Dear Mary, I know that it is true! It came from mother, Mary,—never lies!" says Anstice.

As we drive I reason as it is to laugh, and, in truth, I do not feel inclined to do the latter.

"Do you think it true?" I think.

"What are you going to do?" I ask.

But we have been whirling through the streets like a whirlwind, and, even as I speak we stop at the station.

Anstice springs out of the carriage, and I follow.

"Has the express train left Red Bank?" she demands of the clerk, who answers slightly from his indifference to share at her white face.

"Telegraphed six minutes ago; here in about thirty-five minutes, he explains with unwonted courtesy.

Anstice shivers from head to foot. I think she is going to faint; but instead she sees me within the carriage and sweeps me back to the carriage.

"Down the Red Bank road!" she cries to John. "He thinks she is mad, and actually hesitates and looks at me for a confirmation of the order. But once started we go like the wind. I try to think what she is going to do now that she cannot telegraph and stop the train. Perhaps she wishes to be there when the disaster takes place, to render help if any is possible. We know that Charley is likely to be on the train; we have hoped that he is expected home to night, and this is the only train upon which he can come. That is knowledge which, to Anstice, has a very different value from Anstice's communing with spirits.

After what seems ages, but is in reality a very few minutes, we strike into the Red Bank road, and Anstice leans forward further, indeed, than the Wyncope Bridge, the high way runs parallel with the railroad; but the railroad track is built upon a step bank, and we can dimly see towering above our heads in the darkness.

"I shall climb the bank, if it is not too late!" says Anstice, as she sees no pecuiar outcome to the darkness. "I shall take the carriage lamp and swing it before the train. Pray, pray, Mary, that we may get so far as the bridge!" Her semblance of composure gives way now; she urges John to tell him that he depends upon our haste; and John lashes the horses to a fury.

"Anstice, what if you do stop the train? Think what reason you have to give for it! You will be a laughing-stock, or they will say you are crazy," I say. This is one of the moments of coolness which alternate with those of wild excitement,—one of the moments in which I regard the "communications" as utter nonsense.

"Mary, do you suppose such a consideration as that would weigh one moment with the smallest risk to Charley's life? If I can but once more give alive and safe, what shall I care for what people may say of me? God forgive me! I scarcely even think of the others on the train! The whole world is merged for me in him!"

Still we are dashing on, and the minutes seem like years. I think of strange things. At one moment our expedition seems to me utterly absurd, and I restrain myself with difficulty from laughing wildly. The Bloodcurdling title of a dime novel, which I have seen posted upon a wall, will be appropriate, or, occurs to me: it is "The Maniac's Mad Ride; or, The Bride of Death." I want to repeat it to Anstice, but remember, just in time, that she is not in a mirthful mood. In another moment I am seized by a horror of anxiety and suspense that can be but little less than Anstice's. I try to fully in the impending disaster that I can almost hear the crash and the shrieks and groans of the wounded, the agonized Anstice's imagination, and pray that we may be in time.

We have almost reached the bridge.

Anstice springs out of the carriage, and I follow. It is difficult to check the horses at once, and Anstice would leap out if I did not hold her.

At that instant we see a flashing light, the thunder of the coming train bursts upon our ears. Around a curve it comes at full speed; it is within a few rods of the bridge.

Anstice screams, but her voice is drowned in the noise of the train. I cover my face with my hands.

The crash for which I listen does not come. The roar of the train grows louder as it sweeps almost over our heads, then gradually dies away in the distance, and we hear the shrill blast of the whistle as it nears the city. There is light enough to show us Wyncope Bridge standing as solidly as ever upon its foundations.

I burst into hysterical tears. Anstice lies back upon the cushions, her face covered with her hands. I think she is hysterical, but she suddenly uncovers her face, and I see a beatified look upon it. Until then I have not realized how much she has suffered.

In a clear voice she gives John the order to turn the horses homeward.

I am thinking angrily with myself for believing, for a moment, in the spirits. Yet I am glad that I did not refuse to come with Anstice on this wild goose chase. The result cannot fail to destroy the whole of the ter free from the spell of that trickey sprite that dwells in her little stump of a black pencil.

With magnanimity for which I hear my applaud myself, I refrain from any remark which Anstice may interpret into an upon Anstice's credulity, feeling sure that she is feeling deeply humiliated, when, just as the horses' hoofs sound on the city pavements, she seizes my hand and says, eagerly,—

"Mary, I must be sure that he is safe. That message may have meant something!"

I groan inwardly. Her faith, then, is not completely shattered. But I stifle the groan as a selfish thought crosses me. It would be well to bring them together at once. With a shy and reserved nature like Anstice, and a proud one like Charley's, there may yet be endless misunderstandings.

"We might let John drive round to his house and inquire. It is not much farther," I say carelessly.

Anstice hesitates a moment, then says,—

"You tell him?" And I gave the order to John.

It is I, too, who send John up to the door to inquire whether Charley has come home.

After a moment's parlay we hear Charley's voice.

"What is it, John? Is anything the matter?" he says.

Heedless of Anstice's detaining hand, I put my head out of the carriage door and call "Charley!"

He runs down the steps, the rain pouring upon his bare head.

"Mary! Anstice!" he exclaims in wonder, as I open the carriage door.

Anstice puts forth her hand and touches his, as if to satisfy herself that he is real flesh and blood; then she utters a little cry, and falls forward unconscious on his breast.

I will not let Charley carry her into the house, as he wishes, for I feel that explanations would be difficult to make. The plaudits are practical people, and it may were to be told that we had been driving at breakneck speed through this tempest to intercept railroad-trains at the bidding of the spirits, they would feel it to be their duty to send for strait-jackets for us at once.

But I drive Charley into the carriage, and leave Anstice within, wholly unconscious. I tell him all. To this day Anstice will not speak of it. I tell him that it was untruthful, and good one, which made the whole expedition ridiculous.

Dr. Felix promised Charley on the wedding day that she would "explain everything." I suppose he keeps his promise, and, even in the strictest confidence, I tell the matter to no one but my journal.

Dr. Felix informed me one day that he had carefully investigated the matter, and was more than ever convinced that the mysterious rappings were the result of unconsciousness of the pencil. But Anstice and Mary Steyner were too frivolous and trifling to make the matter worthy of the attention of science.

Perhaps I ought, now, to accept an intership in a college. We hear that he is soon to be married to Anstice, and I know that he whom he has been long betrothed. Mary Steyner has differed very much from the prospective bride in her estimate of the character of Mary Steyner, has been grossly deceived in Dr. Felix, and that everything in this world is inconsistent, except the multiplication table. —Lippincott's.

A New Version of an Old Story.

The fair Imogene D'Eustis had been wedded to the knight by Samuel Higgins. The gallant gentleman had been handed two dollars in cash by the happy bridegroom, the guests were filling themselves up with eatables, and the wedding was rolling along as smoothly as it ever did, when there was a sudden hitch, and a general scattering occasioned by the discovery that the bride was missing.

Her newly-found husband looked under the table and behind the door.

The guests separated to search. Some looked down the well—others down cellar—others in the pigeon-hole and smoke-house, and behind the pig-pen. No Imogene.

Some one then said that she had been abducted by the gypsies, and at the sides of a girl weighing 196 pounds arose the shrill scream which could be heard two miles, being carried off in broad daylight, and in a neighborhood where the Democrats had over 200 majority.

The bridegroom was called in. He looked at her old shawl, measured the length of her shoes, and decided that it was a mysterious case, and he would take the case if desired, but would not guarantee his services satisfactory solution under a year and a half.

The fair Imogene's father hadn't betrayed much excitement, because he knew the wedding feast was the first square meal he had tackled for six months, and he wanted to fill up a little before giving way to emotion. He was now full. He turned around upon the excited and distracted guests, commanded them to wash their hallabaloo, and disappeared up stairs.

When the coy Imogene slipped away from the feast it was to see if her husband would join and follow her. She slid upstairs, mounted to the garret, and fell to brushing the cobwebs off her nose she adorned with a long blue chest in the corner. This chest had been made to hold her father's government bonds, and was hooped with iron and provided with a spring lock, which would not yield to a dollar. Her mission was to hide in the chest and see if her husband would be soft enough to climb up the garret stairs and call peek-a-boo. As the reader knows he wasn't the man to catch on.

The fair Imogene D'Eustis walked up-stairs and made his way to the garret through the same trap door the bride had used. He thought she might be up there to take a last farewell look at the spinning, moldy school books and broken spinning-wheels, and could not see her. He called aloud, but the whistle of the tug on the river was the only answer. He turned to go, but something whispered to him that perhaps he might find a plug of tobacco or a bottle of stomach bitters in the old chest. He advanced with beating heart and threw up the lid.

"Why, pop, is this you?" cried the fair Imogene as she sprang up and tripped her bridal dress clear down the back.

"Yes, this is me!" growled the old man, "and what the jimcracks are you doing here?"

"Hiding from Sam."

"I've a tamal mind to box your ears, big as you are! Here you've raised a regular city convention all over the house, spoilt a dress which cost me $14 with the making, and worry your mother, and scart old Mrs Spigot into a fit!"

"Yes, pop, I——"

"Don't you gibb. Drap yourself through the trap-hole, slide down the ladder and tell the crowd that you don't know beans when they're untied!"

And she took got. And her husband was so mad that he wouldn't even go a free railroad pass to Chicago, and her mother cried, and her father went off down town to play poker, and the fun all in all, the coy bride and the spring lock business didn't pay ten cents on the dollar.—Detroit Free Press.

A Mysterious Machine.

Passers on unfrequented streets in Quincy, Ill., on recent evenings, have been startled by the appearance of a man moving swiftly along upon some odd-looking wheeled contrivance. The mysterious apparition is independent of the town has perfected an invention which is for the present being kept in the background, pending the issuing of a patent. A Herald reporter inspected the new fangled machine has four wheels and is in motion when not propelled by a spring. Its chief point of excellence is said to lie in the improved method of coiling the spring. It is claimed that a child can run one of the mysterious motors for a mile, and other novelties of mechanical travelling. The inventor is now at work upon a model, which he will forward to Washington, together with an application for a patent. The cost of the whole of the machine are 5 feet in diameter and 2½ feet across. The spring is 40 feet long and three inches wide, and when wound will, it is said, lift a weight of 600 pounds.

Married for Keeps.

The skipper of a coal boat on the Baltimore and Ohio Canal recently underwent, after mature deliberation and careful consideration, to marry his cook, who had been a faithful and faithful servant to him for quite a number of his perilous trips on the storm lashed canal. So he spoke to her about the matter one day, and after securing her consent, he ordered the boat tied up at a small town, and being a practical skipper, skipped up the street after a parson. The nuptials were soon tied, the parson beaten down to a dollar and a half for his fee, and then the canal boatman said: "Well Melinda, we are married for keeps now. We are hitched for life and must pull together. I'm a little short-handed to-day, and that leaves you to have got saddle galls on his back, you just take the towpath and lead him down to Harper's Ferry, and I'll stay and have the animals on some plan to give you work on the boat without going ashore in the mud. I've got a powerful sight more respect for you now that you're my wife."—Texas Siftings.

A Cent a Kiss.

In the case of Mary Ann Miller against Stephen Smith, a suit to recover damages for breach of promise of marriage, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,100.32. The case was a novel one. The parties were first cousins, and both have reached and partly passed the prime of life. The plaintiff was housekeeper for the defendant, and told how he had addressed her in the usual country style of courting. When asked if he had ever kissed her, she said, "More than a hundred thousand times." The verdict she gained is at the rate of a cent for a kiss, with a little interest thrown in.

"The bark went down," said the sage patient after he had swallowed a big dose of quinine.

ABDUL HAMID AT HOME.

A Familiar Chat With Royalty.

Mr. Hewitt, member of Congress for New York, has been received by his Majesty as a special audience at the Yildiz Kiosque. Mr. Hewitt was accompanied by General Williams and the chief interpreter of the Legation. The Sultan chatted very familiarly with Mr. Hewitt, who thus describes his interview:

Driving out to Yildiz we passed through the well laid out and well protected palace gardens, and finally the Kiosque, where we were received by Munir Bey and introduced to the ambassador, who ushered us at once into the presence of the Sultan. His Majesty came forward as I entered, and holding out his hand shook mine in a very frank, cordial manner. Then, leading the way towards sofa at the other end of the room, he motioned me to a large armchair on one side, while he drew a similar one up to the other side. There was no ceremonious ceremony and formality.

There was a total absence of courtly etiquette and ceremony. There were no servants and no guards about, the only person present besides myself and the Sultan being Munir Bey. I felt just as much at ease as if I were visiting any private gentleman in New York. My Sovereign was unceremonious and informal in interchange of compliments and mutual enquiries after each other's health. The Sultan spoke in a deliberate tone. The French Ambassador had long had a audience with the Sultan in the morning. Referring to this, he said, "I hear that both America and France are for form of Government was Republican, the Sultan inquiring if the Sultan and the Sublime Porte, in the United States is owing to the absence of politicians, a super abundance of Turks in France is such a disturbing element."

FRANCE AND AMERICA.

Seeing that the Sultan was, in his own mind, comparing the Sublime Porte in the United States with the effervescence of France, I endeavored to explain the great difference between the two Governments. I had to give a sketch of the history of America, but his Majesty was exceedingly attentive, and I found it easy to explain to him the Sultan observed: "Yes, I have heard that you are likely before long to have a member of the Government. Allow me to congratulate you upon the mind Government being that of the United States and not of France. I am very fond of the American nation, because it has no bearing on designs and pit-falls against my country."

His Majesty was very anxious to impress me with the idea that perfect religious freedom existed throughout the empire, and that the followers of all creeds were equally protected by law. His Majesty said:—"In some respects a Christian has the advantage of a Mohammedan, for instance, in the settlement of debts, when Christian creditors are paid first. Moreover, Jews have over and over again sought refuge to avoid persecution in their native countries, and the European Jews in Turkey have descended and are grateful to me. I remember, when I was Governor of Smyrna in 1867, I was asked when no Christian country would receive them. Most of the Jews in Turkey still continue to speak Spanish."

A LEADING QUESTION.

The Sultan finally asked me what I thought about his country and its condition. I naturally hesitated to answer, and made reply. It would have been unbecoming on my part to criticise freely what I had seen, in the hopes of giving his Majesty a lecture on the duties of a Sovereign, and made some commonplace remarks, sheltering myself from further questions on the subject under the excuse of my limited opportunity of observation.

His Majesty struck me as being a perfect gentleman. His manner was exceedingly courteous and friendly, tinged, however, with a little nervous anxiety—not anyness of timidity, but just the amount of hesitation as betrayed the Sultan's fears that he might be asserting himself too much, when his desire was to place himself on a conversational level with his visitor. He seemed a man of great intelligence of thought. His intellect, I should say, was rather of a metaphysical character and his mind was given to searching out and studying details rather than considering subjects generally. His Majesty, as we shall see, carried out adieus, desired me to write to him when in New York.

KIDNAPPED WHEN A CHILD.

A Lad who Believes Himself the Long-Lost Charley Ross.

Charles Augustus Pinkham, who believes himself to be the long-lost Charley Ross, tells a remarkable story:

"I was picked up in the street in Philadelphia, put on board a steamboat, taken to Bristol, then by rail to Portland and Winterport. I was kept in a large house in which there seemed to be a great many children, but I did not see any of them for a very long time, and I did not see them at all the time I was there. After about two years they let me come to my room to play with one one man a while, and sometimes let us go out in the yard to play. It was a large house with high fences all around it. The gift name was Fanny Pressell, and she said that a man named Jesse James stole her from Philadelphia. I was taken down to the Southern States, and the men who stole me were Jesse James, Pinkham, and two men named Davidson and Crockett. I was a very tall man, the tallest man I ever saw, and Jesse James was not so tall, but was a good-looking man. James was light complexion. One of the Davidsons wore a black mustache, and the other had whiskers. James was commonly called Jesse James. Jesse went with me when I was first taken, but did not stop long. After a long time the girl Fanny came down to take on board of a vessel rigged like a barque, and we sailed to the South here count. It might have been to Texas, but I remember that it was very warm. Here Jesse James and the Davidsons came on board and brought their horses with them. The Davidsons did come when called, and would act like circus horses do. They were stalls for the horses on each side, and a section of the forward part of the barque was so fixed that it could be moved, and they made a port they would run out a plank form, take their horses and ride off. Jesse and the rest seemed to own the barque, and managed it as they pleased, and when they charge, who was kinder to me than the rest. The bark was nothing more than a pirate, and once we were chased by a cutter but escaped. The bark was laden with lots of things, and had many guns on board. By guns I mean rifles. At last we made a small port in Brazil, and the tall man was left alone on board. He had been sick, I suppose, for he opened the door of our room and said 'Hurry up, boys, and come out,' and then he told us to go. The girl around for a few days, and then we took to Spanish hotel and stayed there three days until the barque sailed. Finally we got a passage to New York. That was about five years ago. After we got on shore the girl told me that my name was Charley Ross, and she told me always to remember it. It seemed to bring things back to me when she called me Charley Ross, and I remembered my name. I forgotten, I learned to cook and chipped on the barque. I came from Rio to Brazil, and Fanny went with me. She wanted to find out about her people and learned that her father and mother were both dead. When we got back she went to New Lynn, and was at work in a shoe shop. I found she went to Lynn, and where she was at work in the Oswalds, she shoes in the finishing room when I found her last. I saw her last about two years ago. I then shipped in the ship Dr. Boynton, bound from Fall River to South America, and on the way I was very sick with a fever. My hair came off, and when it came out again it was darker than it had been. When I was sick things seemed to come back to me some where. I knew that I was Charley Ross, but I did not know who Charley Ross was. I never read a book about Charley Ross, and I never heard of Charley Ross except what I say said, until about two years ago. I can read a little, but small book, but don't know how to put them together. I Write my name with Jesse, and the rest, I expected to be killed. I held one of them say once, 'What shall we do with the boy?' and the other said, 'Well kill him.' They didn't give me enough to eat sometimes, and then sometimes they gave me a good deal. This year I was in the schooner Lizzie M. Stewart, and we landed at a place called Winterport, and I ran away from the ship. Again while there I saw a large building and a lot of other things near the house that looked natural to me. Still it might not have been the place. I don't know who I am, or where I came from. I think I am Charley Ross, I think Mr. Ross must be my father, and I want to see him."

Pinkham is very ignorant and is unable to recall names, except by a great effort. He is rather confused about ordinary matters, but he appears to be very honorable in his feelings, and to cherish a great reference for the mother he cannot recall. His great desire now is to see Mr. Ross, feeling confident he can satisfy himself to be the real Charley Ross. He relies chiefly on the hope that Frank James may be induced to tell what he knows about the affair. Frank James fails to respond in the way he desires, and declares his purpose to make a personal appeal to him to right the great wrong done by his brother.

Another Balloon Experiment.

The St Louis Globe Democrat has the following item respecting M. Gentil, the inventor of the balloon, of which our Western contemporaries lately had so much to say: M. Gentil was a medical practitioner in France, but owing to political reasons he came to America in 1802, and settled in St. Louis as a locksmith. It has been his life dream to make an air ship, and he has constructed two different machines, which he considered practical. The final effort is a cigar shaped balloon, with gas compartments, which can be made odd, and screw shaped sails at each side to take advantage of the altitude. He claims that he can steer his air ship at will, work his pinions, and by means of a powerful engine, if the air is exhausted. The whole is enclosed in a network, from which depends the car suspended by cords, ropes, hooks, and gaskets, having the lock and gearing of the main deck and bulwarks of a full rigged ship. The model is suspended from the ceiling of his little shop in St. Louis, and is his idol. "It is for the scientific public," M. Gentil said to the Globe, "and of my life; and shall I, then, prostitute my grand work by putting it upon exhibition at ten cents a head, like a stuffed whale or petrified hog. I want no money. I give it to the people, and I am happy."

Ancestry of the Pen.

The earliest mode of writing was on bricks, tiles, oyster-shells, stone, ivory, bark and leaves of trees; and from the latter the term "leaves of a book" is probably derived. Copper and brass plates were very early in use; and a bill of feoffment in copper was found among the ruins of a city in India, bearing date a hundred years B. C. Leather was also used, as well as wooden tablets. Then the papyrus came into use, and about the eighth century the papyrus was superseded by parchment. Paper, however, is of great antiquity, especially among the Chinese; but the first paper-mill in England was built in 1588, by a German, named Spilman. In the 14th century, it was nearly a century and a half—namely, in 1713—before Thomas Watkins, a stationer, thought of sharpening to any thing like perfection. The first approach to a pen was the stylus, a kind of iron bodkin, or bone, or ivory, with the other end for the reverse of it frequent and even fatal use in quarrels, and then it was made of bone, subsequently, was pointed and split, like pens, as in the present day were used.

Saturday always reminds one of the wooden thing which shoemakers use when they make sick folks shoes. It is the last of the weak.

For ball dresses this season, tulle is revived. Pink, yellow, and cream are the great favorites, and for very young ladies the skirts are made quite bouffant and trimmed with ribbon and flowers rather than embroidery or lace.

PERSONAL PARAGRAPHS.

What the World of Fashion and Intelligence is Saying and Doing.

Mary Anderson's portraits are enriching the London photographers.

Mr. Clinton Roosevelt proposes a minimum new sanitarium medium.

One per cent. of the taxes collected in San Francisco is paid by William Sharon.

Professor Cope, the naturalist, denies Mr. Seth Green's assertion that trout cannot hear.

De Soto's bones are taking their journey from Illinois, Arkansas, to the Smithsonian Institute at Washington.

Baron Albert Salvador, of the Paris Figaro, is to make a book about his Western tour with President Arthur.

M. Grevy, the President of the French Republic, has just received a present of a parlor from an African king.

The youngest daughter of the famous David Crockett, Mrs. Matilda Field, is living at the age of sixty-two, in Tennessee.

Mark Twain, on seeing a place called "Battle Lawn," owned by a leather man, asked why they didn't call it "Hide Park."

There are two colored women lawyers in the United States, Mrs. Lockett, of Colorado, and Mary A. S. Cary, of Michigan.

A son of the late Governor John A. Andrew, has lately married a Miss Thayer, of Boston, the fortunate owner of eight million dollars.

The famous and delightful English naturalist, Mr. John George Wood, M. A., F. L. S., is coming to the United States to lecture.

Dean David Davis is said to be prudent in the management of his vast wealth, but to be liberal in giving, having a big heart in his big body.

Robert Burdette, of the Burlington Hawkeye, has a brother, Rev. Chauncey Edward Burdette, who has just sailed for India as a missionary.

Cardinal's brother, Cardinale, who is twenty-three years old, has made his debut as a director in Panama, is Mr. Abbey's assistant conductor.

Mr. Flood, of Bonanza fame, is to build a brown stone palace, for a town house, in San Francisco, where, owing to earthquakes, wood has hitherto been preferred.

The Rev. Thomas E. Green of Chicago, whose sermon on Sunday morning last was, "The Newspaper and How the Devil Uses It," said that Noah's dove was the first reporter.

The shop in which Andrew Johnson labored as a tailor still stands in Greenville, Tennessee, and is now occupied by a colored family. The President is buried in the same town.

Miss Hatty Crocker has just started from San Francisco with Lord and Lady Waterford for a tour forty million dollars, and the heiress of some forty million dollars, and is very sensible girl.

Mr. F. J. Cheney, a county coroner in Arizona, has four gold fish which he found in a plaster in South America, and which he thinks could are the work of prehistoric South American Indians.

The observations of Dr. Woelkof, the Russian meteorologist, show that during the cold waves of winter the greatest cold is found in the plains and valleys, owing to radiation from the soil.

Mrs. Ralph Waldo Emerson, now eighty-three years old, left her retirement for the first time since her husband's death to be present at the wedding, in Dorchester, of Mr. Oscar Jackson, her nephew.

The favorite pet of Madame Ponsini is a cat called Methusalem; of James Booth, a dog called Mr. Mike Barking, a Mexican dog; while Ada Dayas delights in white mice, Fanny Davenport in some fish in a aquarium, and Mary Anderson has a pigeon for flowers.

At the marriage of Miss Miller, a daughter of the lately deceased partner in the Parker House, Boston, by the Rev. Francis Baker, of Newport, the six bridesmaids wore Gainsborough hats, and the officiating clergymen were assisted by three reverend brothers of the groom.

The story told by the Cologne Gazette as to how it came to pass that King Alfonso became known as the Lion of the Uhlans stationed at Strasburg, is not true, at least well invented. There were two regiments of uhlans available, it seems, and the uniforms of both were submitted to the King, who preferred the one with yellow cuffs.

Miss Emily McTavish, a noted Baltimore belle, a famous equestrienne and huntress, married a gentleman of Belmont, Ireland Scott, a grandnieces of the Duchess of Leeds, of Lady Stafford, and of Marchioness Wellesley, and a cousin of Madame Bonaparte's and a descendant of Lord Baltimore, has just taken religious vows and entered the cloister.

Queen Isabella, who has spent much of her time and all her money in Paris, is furious with the reception given to her son, with whom she is now on excellent terms. She is about to publish a volume of the Paris Moneous, and shake the dust of Paris off her feet, a proceeding which all would regret except her husband, who would but thus be spared the formality of leaving his card once a year at her ex-Majesty's residence. Queen Isabella has never offered a good round sum for the establishment.

An Old Russian.

A case of extraordinary longevity is reported by Russian papers from a Bessarabian province, where Saytchuk, a man of above 130 years, enjoys perfect health and strength, but has lost his sight in both eyes. He is a Little Russian by birth and settled in Bessarabia when it was yet under Turkish dominion. His oldest son who is more decrepit than his father is 87 years old. The village of 120 houses, where Saytchuk now lives, has risen from one cottage, which stood on the spot when Saytchuk was a friend, and is exclusively inhabited by direct descendants of the first two inhabitants. The tribe of Saytchuk numbers about fifty families, which live in peace and quiet without ever going to law.

How it Happened.

He was a bank teller. He had been sent off on a vacation, his books overhauled, and he was now standing before the Bank President. The President said, "I presume you acknowledge the embezzlement!"

The End of the Track.

Cascade mountain, which has just been passed by the C. P. railway, is a stupendous elevation of rock, deriving its name from a small stream that oozes high up from its eastern side, and leaps down in pretty cascades from many an abrupt ledge, till reaching the level it loses its identity in the waters of Devil's Head creek.

Seldom is its peak, which is about 3,500 feet above the valley, 8,000 feet above the sea, free from veils of cloud and mist, some hiding it out of sight, setting the mind wondering where its bright ends, and some only dimly obscuring its dark, massive loftiness.

Dense woods of arrow-straight spruce-pines, with here and there smooth lance-like poplars, colors its earth-surfaced parts with shades of green that darken as distance lengthens until ebon spots on the cold gray and white scene is all that tells of mighty forests below.

In the darkest density is the haunt of two black bears, that nightly visit and feed on the carcasses of three worn-out old dead horses lying near a timber camp within 200 yards of the railroad.

But their coming and wariness is more than a match for snares or attempts to discover and slay them, and though one, a huge beast, has been seen unexpectedly several times, his majesty is always missing when purposely wanted.

On Sunday Oct. 21st, some men building a permanent tank at the 3rd siding west of Calgary shot a fine young eagle, which measured 7 feet 10 inches from tip to tip of its outstretched wings. It was a grand bird, and would have been of much value as an ornithological specimen if properly saved and preserved.

Here, now, is a broader valley of the Bow river, very marshy in places, well wooded and thickly bushed in others. It is productive of prolific grass, a hundred tons of good hay having been cut here this autumn. And when the future urges settlement of this region, with clearness of the useless vegetation, and fences enclose cultivated fields and pastures that warmth and light have reclaimed to fertility and utility, pastoral scenes incidental to mountain regions, with cozy little farmhouses—very diminutive contrasted with the gigantic proportions of the surrounding country—gardens of miniature size with cottage flowers of sweet simplicity and clearly defined hue will beautify this present wilderness. Down the steep hills from many a winding path will come at eventide the lowing cattle home, and during the day, far up the heights, the pleasant tinkle, tinkle of bells will tell where they wandering graze. When the mountain sheep crops the short, sweet herbage of ledges that hold a surface of soil from washing away through the repeated rains and snows of ages, small flocks of hardy, tiny sheep will thrive and grow fine wool and luscious mutton. A race of people, only ambitious of simple comforts and a peaceful existence, undisturbed by the ferment of political noise, unmoved by religious fanaticism, unmolled to amass great wealth for the glorification of individual ability, prosperity and luxury, full of wisdom as to the destined fulfilment of mortality, and full of hope as to the certainty of a glorious hereafter, may arise and be the clearest shining jewel in the crown of Canada.—Winnipeg Free Press.

The North Hastings extension executive committee met on the 19th. It was stated that Mr. Daly, C.E., had reported verbally that he had found a practicable route from north of Madoc, running through Tudor east of Salmon lake via L'Amable to Bancroft. The committee, knowing that there were large iron deposits in Wollaston and Faraday, had instructed Mr. Daly to examine into the feasibility of a route through those townships, but Mr. Daly having stated that a route through those townships was not practicable, the committee, feeling the importance of that route, not only in opening the country but in securing the powerful iron interests in assisting to procure a government grant, have secured the services of Mr. Bailey to make a further survey of those two townships, to see if a practicable route could possibly be secured. Upon the reports of Mr. Daly and Mr. Bailey, the committee will decide upon the route to be taken. The residents of the rear township are very enthusiastic over the prospects of railway facilities to the front in the near future.

News-Argus Clubbing List for 1884!

We have been enabled to make very satisfactory clubbing arrangements for 1884 with a few of the best leading agricultural and other papers, purely for the benefit of our subscribers, and can now offer the following inducements:

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Rural Canadian together for $1.60. See advertisement elsewhere.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the American Farmer, together for $1.35. The American Farmer is a neatly printed, well edited monthly, published at Fort Wayne, Ind., at 81 per year. We can supply it with our paper for $1.35. This is the boss offer.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and Grip, Canada's now famous Cartoon sheet, for $2.60. Grip is issued yearly at $2 per year, and every issue is full of wit and wisdom.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Weekly Globe together for $1.80.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Toronto Daily World for $3.10.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Montreal Weekly Witness for $1.85.

Samples of the papers named in this list can be seen at this office.

HOME MATTERS.

Dr. Faulkner is again going into the grain business.

The cheapest place in the county of Hastings to buy whips and horseblankets is at the Springbrook harness shop. E. CARTER.

The proprietor of the Trenton Courier promises a lot of presents when his circulation reaches three million, or three thousand, or some other impossible number.

"Why, Angeline, where did you get those beautiful rich colors on your bonnet?" "Ain't they lovely? I dyed them with the Triangle Package Dyes." 10c.

The new standard time has been adopted by Mr. Walker, so all can set their timepieces, and the village enjoy uniformity. Mr. G. receives the time direct from Toronto by telegraph, and it may therefore be relied upon.

G. L. Vandervoort, of the firm of Preston & Vandervoort, veterinary surgeons, Trenton, intends to establish a branch office in this village. As Dr. Vandervoort is a graduate of the Ontario veterinary college, persons having stock sick would do well to call at his office at the Stirling House, night or day until further notice. Consultation free. Look for advt. in next issue.

The Midland railway has issued a new time-table, to take effect next Monday. Trains will then leave Stirling as follows: For Belleville, etc., 9.45 a.m. and 7.15 p.m. For Peterborough, etc., 8.33 a.m. and 5.15 p.m. Leave for North Hastings junction for Madoc, 12 noon and 7.30 p.m. By taking the 8.33 a.m. train, Toronto can be reached at 4.55 p.m., close connection being made.

The Rev. Mr. Dowling's panorama on Wednesday evening was well attended considering the most unfavorable weather. It rained hard all day, and was so dark as over hanging clouds could make it, besides which the roads were left in a deplorable state, the rain not having sufficiently abated. There was a fair audience, however, chiefly from the village, who were well entertained for an hour and a half by the exhibition of twenty-nine of the large and beautiful paintings which constituted the panoramic combination which Rev. Mr. Dowling is now handling, leaving twenty-two for last (Thursday) evening. There is no doubt a crowded house would have welcomed him had the weather been fair.

The missionary anniversary of the Stirling circuit of the Methodist church of Canada will be held next Sunday and the following week. Sermons: Stirling, 10:30, by Rev. W. H. Poole, and at 7 by Rev. S. McCauley; Wellman's Corners 10:30, Salem 2:30, by Rev. S. McCauley; Collins' 3, Reid's 6:30, by Rev. W. H. Poole; Town hall, Rawdon, 10:30, Eggleton's 2:30, by Rev. R. Walker. Week night meetings: Wellman's, Monday 7:30; Salem, Tuesday; deputation, Rev. Messrs. George Leech, W. H. Poole and R. Walker. Collins' Monday evening, Reid's Tuesday evening, and Eggleton's Thursday evening; deputation Rev. Messrs. John Walker, H. Thomas and R. H. Leitch. All the deputations will meet in Stirling on Wednesday evening. Collections at all these services in aid of missions.

A meeting of the management committee of the local bible society was held at Dr Boulter's office on Monday evening. Present, Dr. Boulter (president), Rev. Mr. Walker, Rev. Mr. Gray, Messrs. B. Bush, J. Ralph, R. B. Jones and R. F. Gilbert. It was decided to do the collecting this year on the denominational plan, that is the collectors to solicit within their own denomination anywhere, instead of dividing the village into wards. The following were appointed: C. M. church, Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Thos. McKee; Church of England, Miss Hatch and Miss Smith; M. E. church, Miss Jennie Wescott and Miss L. Girdwood; Presbyterian and Baptist churches, Miss Ralph and Miss Henry. The returns to be made by Dec. 10th. A resolution was passed recommending that hereafter subscriptions be taken at the annual meeting.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings last C. Panchard, D.S.C.R. of the Independent Order of Foresters, instituted Court Stirling, I.O.F., in the village, with the following officers:

C.D.H.C.R.—T. G. Clute.
C.R.—Rev. T. Golden.
V.C.R.—Rev. R. Walker.
R.S.—Rev. R. H. Leitch.
F.S.—R. F. Gilbert.
Treas.—T. G. Clute.
S.W.—Chas. Keirl.
J.R.—Geo. Winters.
S.C.R.—Rev. J. M. Gray.
Chaplain—Rev. Mr. Stratton.
Physician—J. S. Sprague, M.D.

The court meets on the 2nd Monday of each month, but where are not learned. The Foresters are a secret society, existing mainly for the purposes of mutual insurance, and of which they have an excellent scheme in connection.

Nine years ago Rev. Mr. Stratton, while stationed at Picton, took the provident idea of building a home, and with the view of having a refuge for himself and family when his days of usefulness in the ministry were over. A building site was purchased on the corner of Queen and Centre streets, one of the most desirable locations in Picton, and the building was duly put up, being a handsome two story brick cottage, with all the modern improvements, barn, etc. Immediately on its completion it was rented by one of the leading merchants, who has occupied it ever since. On Wednesday last, however, about noon, the fire, gentleman received the disquieting news by telegraph that on Tuesday night the whole place had been burned to the ground, and nothing saved. There was no insurance, about sufficient to cover the remaining encumbrance, which leaves him with a vacant lot covered with charred ruins to represent the economies and self denials of nine years of an active life. Mr. Stratton was far from well in body when the telegram arrived, and it can easily be imagined that the news would not help him to recover strength. He deserves, and will doubtless receive, the sympathy of all true friends in this hour of disappointment and blasted hopes.

The recent rains were very much needed, and fully replenished the empty wells and cisterns.

Mr. Thos. McMurray, lecturer for the grand division, Sons of Temperance, was in the village this week, intending to lecture in behalf of that order Wednesday night, but owing to the clashing of dates with Mr. Dowling's panorama, he will visit Stirling again. Mr. McMurray had been notified of the clashing of dates, but owing to a miscarriage of the mail the notice did not reach him.

Dr. Rossvally.

Says the Trent Valley Advocate:

The shining knave mentioned of last week takes "back water" in reference to Rossvally, the Jew. The "converted" showed Mr. Thompson his credentials, etc., and the resident minister had a private note from a Brooklyn divine saying Rossvally was "all right." From which he THE NEWS-ARGUS concludes it was wrong. Bro. Thompson, did you never hear of two rogues "scratching" a common ass? In this case one appears to be in Brooklyn, the other in Canada.

If the Advocate were not possessed of so strong a desire to establish a black reputation for Dr. Rossvally rather than a good one, it would never have been so reckless of the truth as to state that "THE NEWS-ARGUS takes back water" on any of its utterances in reference to that individual. We never made any charge against him, therefore never had any to take back. What was done was to make reference, as in duty bound, to certain charges which reached Stirling just as we were going to press that week, and then, in common fairness, judgment was withheld until both sides received an equal hearing. This course neither the Advocate, nor many other papers or men that could be easily named, had the manliness to do. A cry of "stop thief" was raised, and we joined in by a large number ever ready and willing to kick a man down further rather than to stop a moment and see if he has any defence whatever to offer. On the other hand, we never affirmed, either publicly or privately, that Dr. Rossvally was an impostor. What we said was simply understood by those willing to understand it, and it is not and will not be recoded from, viz., that given his credentials the weight which the editor of the Advocate would expect credentials in his behalf from high authorities to receive among strangers, he (Rossvally) must necessarily be a fraud, and from the charges laid against him until they are proved at least as certainly as his good character; and that if he is an impostor, then all those who endorse him so warmly are worse than impostors for lending their names to impose him upon strangers. And these are not only "two," as the Advocate again dishonestly puts it—"one in Brooklyn and the other in Canada"—but dozens and scores of men whose names should command respect or they should be buried from the positions they now occupy. When he is proved a rogue then THE NEWS-ARGUS will have no hesitation in denouncing him; but so far we insist that the weight of evidence is in his favor, and had the Advocate taken our course it would be able to say that it had done simple justice to both sides.

Since the foregoing was written, we have received the Brooklyn (N. Y.) daily Times of Saturday last, which contains the following paragraph, with naturally interest to those where Dr. Rossvally is best known—at home—he is considered worthy to occupy the pulpit of one of the leading churches of the city. If he is an impostor, how deeply is that pulpit degraded!

Zion A. M. E. church, corner of South Third and Eleventh streets.—The pulpit of the above church will be occupied on Sunday evening at 7:30 by Rev. Dr. M. L. Rossvally, the converted Jew. Subject, "That Jew. Who and what is He? Away with Him." Seats free. All are cordially invited.

LETTERS FROM READERS.

It is to be distinctly understood that any opinions expressed in communications are those of the writers—not necessarily of ours in one else. Under no circumstances will any letter be inserted unless the name of the author is in possession of the editor.

To the Editor of The News-Argus.

MR. EDITOR—Permit me to call the attention of the public, through your paper, to the disgraceful way in which the street committee are having the sidewalk built east of Dr. Parker's new premises, going north. If it is not changed at once, I sincerely hope some one in the night, for public safety, will pull it down. It is fully eight or nine inches too high. I know from experience, if we have one except in name, will use his jurisdiction in this matter. The balance of the city fathers will take the man who, when his wife was fighting the bear, said he never saw a fight he took so little interest in. Take a little interest, Mr. Councillors, in the duties you agreed to perform for the corporation to the best of your ability, else we may be obliged to go about with a portable step-ladder for mounting sidewalks in Stirling.

RATEPAYER.

More Reflections by an Older Settler.

To the Editor of The News-Argus.

I see in your paper "Trent valley reflections by an old settler," a correspondent of the Trenton Courier. I beg to differ with him in some of his statements. He seems to know very little about the locality he is writing about, or he would not state that the dam at Chisholm's rapids backed the water up to Healey Falls. The water is backed nearly up to Percy Boom. It could not back the water over Rainey's Falls and Healey Falls if the dam at Chisholm's was fifty feet high. There were very few had decided land at that time. It all belonged to the government and the Canada company. Those who had bought paid from 50c. to $3 per acre; and the government gave them $7 to $10 per acre damages, and they occupy the same lands that they sold when the water is low for pasture you wonder. At the time of the old man shed, they were as scarce as hens' teeth. As for the thousands of acres drowned by the dam, I think Mr. Editor, I can count all. I think, was 3,000 acres. The correspondent says when the government engineers came along each month, but where are not learned. There were anxious inquiries, but still hope; but when the realization came there were blighted hopes and ruined homes. He also says we were fooled by a military chief that stopped the works. It was the rebellion in 1837 and 1838 that caused the works to be stopped. I was there at the oldest settler living at Chisholm's rapids, where I settled in 1836. There was not a house in sight between Frankford and Chisholm's rapids, and no bridge across the river at Frankford. We now have a county gravel road and a county bridge across the river Trent at Chisholm's rapids; we have the Central Ontario cars running past my door from Picton, and they are driving the work to completion as fast as men and money can do it; the steam shovel is working early and late loading the gravel cars, and I am told by judges that the railroad bridge across the river is second to none in the dominion. The reason I settled in this part of the county was the Trent valley canal. When I settled here the surveyors' stakes stood where they were planted for the improvement of the inland waters of the Newcastle district. I still hope to live to ride on a steamer from the bay of Quinte to Georgian bay, with the large expenditure there has been made. The Hon. Lewis Wallbridge's opinion is that with the large expenditure by judges that the railroad bridge across the river is second to none in the dominion. The reason I settled in this part of the county was the Trent valley canal. When I settled here the surveyors' stakes stood where they were planted for the improvement of the inland waters of the Newcastle district. I still hope to live to ride on a steamer from the bay of Quinte to Georgian bay, with the large expenditure there has been made. The Hon. Lewis Wallbridge's opinion is that with the large expenditure making now it was sure to be built, whatever government is in power. I will quote the opinion of another statesman, the late Hon. Edmund Murney: "If the canal at that time had been built, it would make a town from Chisholm's rapids to Stirling." The pioneers of this section of country had a good deal to contend with. Forty and fifty years ago there was no market-house in the town of Belleville, the farmer had to peddle his produce in the street, and take trade for what he sold. It was hard on the settler to make land payments and pay taxes. The Hon. Billa Flint was the first who paid cash for wheat. I have sold wheat at 50c. per bushel, rye at 30c., oats at 15c., butter 8c. per lb. There were no pianos in the farm-houses, or covered carriages. The best music in the farm-house was the spinning-wheel and loom. No reapers and mowers. All the work was done by the hone and sinews of the hardy sons of toil, and I would be safe in saying there was not one dozen farms under mortgage in the township of Sidney, only those that were purchasing land. Now as we stand, with all the modern improvements, the sons of many of the old settlers are losing the farms that their fathers made. The cause is too fast living, and we hope they may do better.

Never give up is the secret of glory,
Nothing so wise can philosophy teach.

Chisholm's rapids.

Colborne will have a bicycle club.

Gilmour & Co. have removed their office from Madoc.

R. W. Turner, Camphellford, has lately taken from one-quarter acre of ground a crop of 350 cords of stone.

W. J. Hunter has established a line of hacks in Belleville, and has purchased several neat carriages and coupes.

Geo. Q. Dowler, late headmaster of the Brighton public school, left on the 5th inst. to fill an engagement with the World Publishing Co., New York, as their agent in Australia, New Zealand, etc.

On the 9th, as the workmen in Smith's flouring-mill, Campbellford, were in the act of lowering a large water-wheel for the place prepared for it, the chain which suspended it snapped asunder, and it fell below several feet and was broken. It was completely destroyed, and a new one had to be ordered.

The works on the Trent valley canal are progressing favorably. The contractors have locks at Fenelon Falls and Bobcaygeon are now proceeding with the masonry works for the lock walls, and have a large force of men employed. It is to be hoped the contract for a section on the lower Trent will shortly receive the attention of the government.

D. E. Howatt, of the Bay View farm, Deseronto, departed for New York to arrange the shipment of a Jersey bull and cow which have been secured at great expense. This new importation of stock is said to be far superior to any yet introduced on the farm, and will be a decided gain to the stock-raising interests of this part of Canada.

A number of gentlemen interested in the extension of the R. & N. H.R. northwards met on Friday night last at Belleville. There were present: A. F. Wood M. P. P., E. D. O'Flynn, Dr. Loomis, Alex. Brown, Ald. Dickson, Thomas Meikle, and R. C. Clute. After a lengthened conversation a subcommittee was appointed to confer with John Bell, solicitor, relative to the charter of the Midland railway, which has authority to build the road to Bancroft. The question of extending the line to Mattawa on the Ottawa, to connect with the Canada Pacific, and thence to Hudson bay, was discussed.

T. Atkinson, of Campbellford, and A. Denmark, of Seymour, took a journey to Burnt Lake, in a canoe and on foot. The passage was a rough one, as they were compelled to carry the canoe over portages, and to wade three miles through a swamp in which they sometimes sank to their knees in water; but after a three days' journey they reached the desired hunting-ground. Having only a few hours to spare after their arrival, they started out on the hunt and slayed three deer. They report deer as being unusually numerous in the Burnt Lake section, and they might have been surfeited with sport had they been able to remain longer.

After nearly four years of expensive experiments, successes and failures, at last, to have crowned the Rathbun company's efforts to discover satisfactory methods of utilizing the refuse from their works. Not only will gas of a superior quality be eliminated from this refuse, but various other useful products will also be evolved. We might instance among others fine charcoal, suitable for the manufacture of gunpowder, for use in refrigerators, and as a disinfectant for stables, cesspools, and various other purposes. Then by different chemical combinations there will also be formed acetates of lime, sugar of lead, wood alcohol, pine tar, and a long list of commodities, useful in various arts. The company is to be congratulated on the success of their enterprise, which opens up a new era in the history of the milling world.

The Bell Telephone Co. have reached Trenton, and have erected their poles, immense tall sticks with two cross-bars eight feet long and provided with pins for wires. The poles will be painted throughout—eight feet high red and the rest blue. The agency has been given to H. Meade, a very central place. Mr. Meade will employ a person to look after it, and the office will be in a room upstairs. The tariff of fees is not yet published. The yearly charge for a telephone is said to be $38.00 in a house and $35.00 in a place of business. It will connect with Montreal and every important place in the province of Ontario, and will be a powerful rival to the telegraph.

E. F. PARKER.

A Prince Edward county minister realized from one of his appointments last year the magnificent sum of $13. That was $13 better than nothing.

Messrs. Gilmour & Co. give notice that at the next session of the Ontario legislature they will apply for an act of parliament to legalize the by-law granting them the right to construct a railway through the town of Trenton.

On the 10th, Rev. F. McAmmond, of Madoc, was made the recipient of a beautiful set of single harness by the friends of the Hazards's corners appointment, value of $30, and Rev. E. N. Baker was presented with a well filled purse by well wishers from the same neighborhood.

Conductor Morris says it is a rare thing for a man to be injured on the road, but a few nights ago attempted to eat her young-est child. An older child alarmed some neighbors in the night, but before they got to the house the mother had badly bitten and torn the young one. The unfortunate woman was, no doubt, temporarily insane.

Recently Flint & Holden decided to put the saws and single-mill in their establishment in thorough order for the winter season, and secured the services of J. D. McCollough had been in the employ of Gilmour & Co. Monday morning Mr. McColl came from Trenton to begin his labors. About eleven o'clock, as he was engaged in fixing the single saw, his left hand came in contact with that machine while in motion, was cut from the thumb to the wrist joint, and had to be amputated.

A shocking tragedy has occurred about four miles from Madoc. A young lad 14 years of age, son of the late James Moore, was playing in his mother's house with a neighbor's shotgun when loaded. The boy put the end of the barrel in his mouth and began to blow, when a companion lighted a match and applied it to the nipple. The unfortunate boy's head was blown to pieces. The text applied to see if the gun was loaded probably consisted in their minds in seeing if blowing in a tube could extinguish a match!

Rev. W. Buchanan, of Warkworth, was the victim of very serious injuries through the Hallow'een antics of a number of boys. The rev. gentleman was returning home in his buggy from some ministerial duties in the district, about 10 o'clock, and as he was nearing Warkworth, between that village and Norham, his horse shied at a gate which had been placed in an upright position across the road, and threw him out upon the ground with such force as to render him insensible. He lay in this state, he thinks, about one hour and a-half, when he recovered consciousness, and between crawling and walking managed to reach his home. Mr. Buchanan describes his feelings when his senses returned as most intense, and he thought he would perish with cold and exposure. His injuries are about the head and back, and though at first supposed to be fatal have assumed a different aspect, and he is slowly recovering. The boys who put the obstruction in the road may assist Mr. Buchanan or make known the fact of his injury.

The proprietor of the Trenton Courier promises a lot of presents when his circulation reaches three million, or three thousand, or some other impossible number.

"Why, Angelina, where did you get those beautiful rich colors on your bonnet?" "Ain't they lovely? I dyed them with the Triangle Package Dyes." 10c.

The new standard time has been adopted by Mr. Calder, so all can set their timepieces, and the village enjoy uniformity. Mr. C. receives the time direct from Toronto by telegraph, and it may therefore be relied upon.

G. L. Vandervoort, of the firm of Preston & Vandervoort, veterinary surgeons, Trenton, intends to establish a branch office in this village. As Dr. Vandervoort is a graduate of the Ontario veterinary college, persons having stock sick would do well to call at his office at the Stirling House, night or day until further notice. Consultation free. Look for advt. in next issue.

The Midland railway has issued a new time-table, to take effect next Monday. Trains will then leave Stirling as follows: For Belleville, etc., 9:45 a.m. and 7:15 p.m. For Peterborough, etc., 8:33 a.m. and 5:15 p.m. Leave North Hastings junction for Madoc, 12 noon and 7:30 p.m. By taking the 8.33 a.m. train, Toronto can be reached at 6.55 p.m., close connections being made.

☞ Rev. Mr. Dowling's panorama on Wednesday evening was well attended considering the most unfavorable weather. It rained hard all day. The night was as dark as over-hanging clouds could make it, besides which the roads were left in a deplorable state, the rain not being fully abated. There was a fair audience, however, chiefly from the village, who were well entertained for an hour and a half by the exhibition of twenty-nine of the largest and most beautiful paintings which constituted the panoramic combination which Rev. Mr. Dowling is now handling, leaving twenty two for last (Thursday) evening. There is no doubt a crowded house would have welcomed him had the weather been fair.

The missionary anniversary of the Stirling circuit of the Methodist church of Canada will be held next Sunday and the following week. Sermons: Stirling, 10:30, by Rev. W. H. Peake, and at 7 by Rev. S. McCauley; Wellman's Corners 10:30, Salem 2:30, by Rev. S. McCauley; Collins' 3, Reid's 6:30, by Rev. W. H. Peake; Town hall, Rawdon, 10.30, Eggleton's 2:30, by Rev. R. Walker. Week night meetings: Wellman's, Monday 7:30; Salem, Tuesday; deputation, Rev. Messrs. George Leech, W. H. Peake and R. Walker. Collins' Monday evening, Reid's Tuesday evening, and Eggleton's Thursday evening; deputation Rev. Messrs. John Walker, H. Thomas and R. H. Leitch. All the deputations will meet in Stirling on Wednesday evening. Collections at all these services in aid of missions.

A meeting of the management committee of the local bible society was held at Dr Boulter's office on Monday evening. Rev. Mr. Bowles (president), Rev. Mr. Walker, Rev. Mr. Gray, Messrs. B. Bush, J. Ralph, R. B. Jones and R. P. Gilbert. It was decided to do away with collecting this year on the denominational plan, that is the collectors to solicit within their own denomination anywhere, instead of dividing the village into wards. The following were appointed: C. M. church, Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Thos. McKee; Church of England, Miss Hatch and Miss Smith; M. E. church, Miss Jennie Wescott and Miss L. Girdwood; Presbyterian and Baptist churches, Miss Ralph and Miss Henry. The returns to be made by Dec. 10th. A resolution was passed recommending that hereafter subscriptions be taken at the annual meeting.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings last C. Panchard, D.S.C.R., of the Independent Order of Foresters, instituted Court Oakhill of that order at Stirling, with the following officers:

C.D.H.C.R.—T. G. Clute.
C.R.—Rev. T. Golden.
V.C.R.—Rev. R. Walker.
R.S.—Rev. R. H. Leitch.
F.S.—R. P. Gilbert.
Treas.—T. G. Clute.
S.W.—Chas. Keirl.
J.R.—Geo. Winters.
P.C.R.—Rev. M. Gray.
Chaplain—Rev. Mr. Graham.
Physician—J. S. Sprague, M.D.

The court meets on the 2nd Monday of each month, but where we not learned. The Foresters are a secret society, existing mainly for the purposes of mutual insurance, and it is high they have an excellent scheme in connection.

Nine years ago Rev. Mr. Stratton, while stationed at Picton, took the provident idea of building a home, with the view of having a refuge for himself and family when his days of usefulness in the ministry were over. A building site was purchased on the corner of Queen and Centre streets, one of the most desirable locations in Picton, and the building was duly put up, being a handsome two story brick cottage, with all the modern improvements, barn, etc. Immediately on its completion it was rented by one of the leading merchants, who has occupied it ever since. On Wednesday last, however, about noon, the rev. gentleman received the distressing news by telegraph that on Tuesday night the whole place had been burned to the ground, and nothing saved. There was an insurance about sufficient to cover the remaining encumbrance, which leaves him with a vacant lot covered with charred ruins to represent the economies and self denials of nine years of an active life. Mr. Stratton was for many well in body when the telegram arrived, and it can easily be imagined that the news would not help him to recover strength. He deserves, and will doubtless receive, the sympathy of all true friends in this hour of disappointment and blasted hopes.

The recent rains were very much needed, and fully replenished the empty wells and cisterns.

Mr. Thos. McMurray, lecturer for the second division, Sons of Temperance, was in the village this week, intending to lecture in behalf of that order Wednesday night, but being the bearer of cheating with his Mr. Dowling's panorama, he will visit Stirling again. Mr. McMurray had been notified of the claim against him, but owing to miscarriage of the mail the notice did not reach him.

Dr. Rossvally.

Says the Trent Valley Advocate:

The writing News-Argus of last week takes "back water" in reference to Rossvally, the Jew. The "cow-tail" showed Mr. Thompson his credentials, etc., and the resident minister had a private note from a Brooklyn divine saying Rossvally was all right. From which the News-Argus quite concludes it was wrong. Bro. Thompson, and you never heard of two rogues "working" a community? In this case one appears to be in Brooklyn, the other in Canada.

If the Advocate were not possessed of so strong a desire to establish a black reputation for Dr. Rossvally rather than a good one, it would never have been so reckless of the truth as to state that "THE NEWS-ARGUS takes back water" on any of its utterances in reference to that individual. We never made any charge against him, therefore never had any to take back. What was done was to make reference, as in duty bound, to certain charges which reached Stirling just as we were going to press that week, and then, in order that fair play might be vouchsafed until both sides received an equal hearing. This course neither the Advocate, nor many other papers on our table could be easily named, had the manliness to do. A cry of "stop thief" was raised, and was joined in by a large number ever ready and willing to kick a man down fairest when rather than to stop a moment and see if he has any defence whatever to offer. On the other hand, we never affirmed, either publicly nor privately, that Dr. Rossvally was not an impostor. What we said in easily understood by those who understand it, and it is not and will not be recorded from, viz., that giving his credentials the weight which the editor of the Advocate would expect credentials in his behalf from high authorities to receive among strangers, he (Rossvally) must reasonably be held free from the charges laid against him until they are proved at least as certainly as his good character is; and that if he is an impostor, then all those who endorse him so warmly are worse than impostors for lending their name to impose him upon strangers. And these are not only "two," as the Advocate again dishonestly puts it—"one in Brooklyn and the other in Canada"—but dozens and scores of men whose names should command respect or they should be hurled from the positions they occupy. When he is proved a rogue THE NEWS-ARGUS will have no hesitation in denouncing him; but so far we insist that the weight of evidence is in his favor, and had the Advocate taken our course it would be able to say that it had done simple justice to both sides.

Since the foregoing was written, we have received the Brooklyn (N. Y.) daily Times of Saturday last, which contains the following paragraph, which naturally shows that where Dr. Rossvally is best known—at home—he is considered worthy to occupy the pulpit of one of the leading churches of the city. If he is an impostor, how deeply is that pulpit degraded:

Zion A. M. E. church, corner of South Third street and Rutledge street, Eastern District, the church will be occupied on Sunday evening at 7:30 by Rev. Dr. M. L. Rossvally, the converted Jew. Subject, "That Jew. Who and what is He? Away with Him." Seats free. All are cordially invited.

LETTERS FROM READERS.

It is to be distinctly understood that any opinions expressed in communications are those of the writers and necessarily of no one else. Under no circumstances will any letter be inserted unless the real name of the author is in possession of the editor.

To the Editor of The News-Argus.

MR. EDITOR—Permit me to call the attention of the public, through your paper, to the disgraceful way in which the street committee are having the sidewalk built east of Dr. Parker's new premises, going north. It is not changed at once, I sincerely hope some one in the night, for public safety, will pull it down. It is fully eight or nine inches too high. I hope the revs. if we have one at all, will take up his jurisdiction in this matter. The balance of the city fathers seem like the man who, when his wife was fighting a bear, said he never saw a fight he took so little interest in. Take a little interest, Mr. Councillors, in the duties you agreed to perform for the corporation to the best of your ability, else we may be obliged to go about with a portable step-ladder for mounting sidewalks in Stirling.

More Reflections by an Older Settler.

To the Editor of The News-Argus.

I see in your paper "Trent valley reflections by an old settler," a correspondent of the Trenton Courier. I beg to differ with him in some of his statements. He seems to know very little about the locality he is writing about, or he would not state that the dam at Chisholm's rapids backed the water up to Healey Falls. The water is backed nearly up to Percy Boom. It could not back the water over Rainey's Falls and Healey Falls if the dam at Chisholm's was fifty feet high. There were very few had deeded land at that time. It all belonged to the government or to the Canada company. Those who had bought paid from 50c. to $3 per acre, and the government gave them 200 acres free, as a damage, and they occupy the same lands that they sold when the water is low for pasture and meadow. As for the land they sold, most of it was scarce as hens' teeth. As for the thousands of acres drowned by the dam, the report of Mr. Hunter, the land agent, was 3,000 acres. The correspondent says when the government engineers came along that there was anxious enquiry, but not hope; but when the realization came there were blighted hopes and ruined homes. He also says we were ruled by a military chief that stopped the works. It was the rebellion in 1837 and 1838 that caused the works to stop. Mr. Editor, I am the oldest settler living at Chisholm's rapids, where I settled in 1836. There was not a house in sight between Frankford and Chisholm's rapids, and no bridge across the river at Frankford. We now have a county gravel road and a county bridge across the river Trent at Chisholm's rapids; we have the Central Ontario cars running past my door and Canada's rapids, and we are driving the work to completion as fast as men and money can do it; the steam shovel is working early and late loading the gravel trains, and I am told by judges that the railroad bridge across the river is second to none in the Dominion. The reason I settled in this part of the country was the Trent valley canal. When I settled here the surveyors' stakes stood where they were planted for the improvement of the inland waters of the Newcastle district. I still hope to live to ride on a steamer from the bay of Quinte to Georgian bay, with the large expenditure there has been made. The Hon. Lewis Wallbridge's opinion is that with the large expenditure making now it was sure to be built, whatever government is in power. I will quote the opinion of another statesman, the late Hon. Edmund Murney: "If the canal at that time had been built, it would make a town from Chisholm's rapids to Stirling." The pioneers of this section of country had a good deal to contend with. Forty and fifty years ago there was no market-house in the town of Belleville; the farmer had to peddle his produce in the street, and take trade for what he sold. It was hard on the settler to make land payments and pay taxes. The Hon. Bills Flint was the first who paid cash for wheat. I have sold wheat at 50c. per bushel, rye at 30c., oats at 15c., butter 8c. per lb. There were no pianos in the farm-houses, or covered carriages. The best music in the farm-house was the spinning wheel and loom. No reapers and mowers. All the work was done by the bone and sinews of the hardy sons of toil, and I would do it in saying there was not one dozen farms under mortgage in the township of Sidney, only those that were purchasing land. Now as we stand, with all the modern improvements, the sons of many of the old settlers are losing the farms that their fathers paid for. The cause is too fast living, and we hope they may do better.

Never speak up is the secret of glory.
Nothing so wise can philosophy teach.

A SUBSCRIBER.

Chisholm's rapids.

Colborne will have a bicycle club.

Gilmour & Co. have removed their office from Madoc.

R. W. Turner, Campbellford, has lately taken from one-quarter acre of ground a crop of 350 cords of stove.

W. J. Hunter has established a line of hacks in Belleville, and has purchased several neat carriages and coupes.

Geo. Q. Dowler, late headmaster of the Brighton public school, left on the 5th inst. to fill an engagement with the World Publishing Co., New York, and their agent in Australia, New Zealand, etc.

On the 9th, as the workmen in Smith's flouring-mill, Campbellford, were in the act of lowering a large water-wheel to the place prepared for it, the chain which suspended it snapped asunder, and it fell below several feet and was broken. It was completely destroyed, and a new one had to be ordered.

The works on the Trent valley canal are progressing favorably. The contractors for the locks at Fenelon Falls and Buckhorn are now proceeding with the masonry works for the lock walls, and have a large force of men employed. It is to be hoped the contract for a section of the lower Trent will shortly receive the attention of the government.

D. E. Howatt, of the Bay View farm, Desoronto, drove third for New York to arrange the shipment of a Jersey bull and cow which have been secured at great expense. This new importation of stock is said to be far superior to any yet introduced on the farm, and will be a decided gain to the stock-raising interests of this part of Canada.

A number of gentlemen interested in the extension of the B. & N. H. R. northwards met Friday night last at Belleville. There were present: A. F. Wood M. P. P., E. D. O'Flynn, Dr. Loomis, Alex. Brown, Ald. Dickson, Thomas Kelso, and R. C. Clute. After a lengthened conversation a subcommittee was appointed to confer with John Bell, solicitor, relative to the charter of the Midland railway, which has authority to build the road to Bancroft. The question of extending the line to Mattawa, on the Ottawa, Eldorado and Lake Nipissing Pacific, and thence to Hudson bay, was discussed.

W. Atkinson, of Campbellford, and A. Denmark, of Seymour, took a journey to Burnt Lake, in a canoe and on foot. The passage was a rough one, as they were compelled to carry the canoe over portages, and to wade three miles through a swamp in which they sometimes sank to their knees in water but after a three days' journey they reached the desired hunting-ground. Having only a few hours to spare after their arrival, they started out on the hunt and played three deer. They report deer as being unusually numerous in the Burnt Lake section, and they might have been surfeited with sport had they been able to remain longer.

After nearly four years of expensive experiments, success seems, at last, to have crowned the Rathbun company's efforts to discover satisfactory methods of utilizing the refuse from their mills. Not only will gas of a superior quality be eliminated from this refuse, but various other useful products will also be evolved. We might instance among others fine charcoal, suitable for the manufacture of gunpowder, for use in refrigerators, and as a disinfectant for stables, cesspools, and various other purposes. Then by different chemical combinations there will also be formed acetates of lime, sugar of lead, wood alcohol, pine tar, and a long list of commodities, useful in various arts. The company is to be congratulated on the success of their enterprise, which opens up a new era in the history of the milling world.

The Bell Telephone Co. have reached Trenton, and have erected their poles, immense tall sticks with two cross-bars eight feet long and provided with pins for wires. The poles will be painted throughout—eight feet high red and the rest blue. The agency has been given to H. Meade, a very central place. Mr. Meade will employ a person to look after it, and the office will be in a room upstairs. The tariff of fees is not yet published. The yearly charge for a telephone is said to be $38.00 in a house and $35.00 in a place of business. It will connect with Montreal and every important place in the province of Ontario, and will be a powerful rival to the telegraph.

The North Hastings extension executive committee met on the 19th. It was stated that Mr. Daly, C.E., had reported verbally that he had found a practicable route from north of Madoc, running through Tudor east of Salmon lake and L'Amable to Bancroft. The committee, knowing that there were large iron deposits in Wollaston and Faraday, had instructed Mr. Daly to examine into the feasibility of a route through those townships, but Mr. Daly having stated that a route through those townships was not practicable, the committee, feeling the importance of that route, not only in opening the country but in securing the powerful iron interests in assisting to procure a government grant, have secured the services of Mr. Bailey to make a further survey of those two townships, to see if a practicable route could possibly be secured. Upon the reports of Mr. Daly and Mr. Bailey, the committee will decide upon the route to be taken. The residents of the rear townships are very enthusiastic over the prospects of railway facilities to the front in the near future.

Consultation free. Look for advt. in next issue.

The Midland railway has issued a new time-table, to take effect next Monday. Trains will then leave Stirling as follows: For Belleville, etc., 9:45 a.m. and 7:15 p.m. For Peterborough, etc., 8:33 a.m. and 5:15 p.m. Leave North Hastings junction for Madoc, 12 noon and 7:30 p.m. By taking the 8.33 a.m. train, Toronto can be reached at 5.55 p.m., close connections being made.

Rev. Mr. Dowling's panorama on Wednesday evening was well attended considering the most unfavorable weather. It rained hard all day. The night was as dark as over hanging clouds could make it, besides which the roads were left in a deplorable state, the rain not being fully abated. There was a fair audience, however, chiefly from the village, who were well entertained for an hour and a half by the exhibition of twenty-nine of the large and beautiful paintings which constituted the panoramic combination which Rev. Mr. Dowling is now handling, leaving twenty for last (Thursday) evening. There is no doubt a crowded house would have welcomed him had the weather been fair.

The missionary anniversary of the Stirling circuit of the Methodist church of Canada will be held next Sunday and the following week. Sermons: Stirling, 10:30, by Rev. W. H. Peake; and at 7 by Rev. J. McCauley; Wellman's Corners 10:30, Salem 2:30, by Rev. S. McCauley; Collins' 3, Reid's 6:30, by Rev. W. H. Peake; Town hall, Rawdon, 10:30, Eggleton's 2:30, by Rev. R. Walker. Week night meetings: Wellman's, Monday 7:30; Salem, Tuesday; deputation, Rev. Messrs. George Leach, W. H. Peake and R. Walker. Collins' Monday evening, Reid's Tuesday evening, and Eggleton's Thursday evening; deputation Rev. Messrs. John Walker, H. Thomas and R. H. Leitch. All the deputations will meet in Stirling on Wednesday evening. Collections at all these services in aid of missions.

A meeting of the management committee of the local bible society was held at Dr Boulter's office on Monday evening. Present, Dr Boulter (president), Rev. Mr. Walker, Rev. Mr. Gray, Messrs. B. Bush, J. Ralph, R. B. Jones and R. P. Gilbert. It was decided to do the collecting this year on the denominational plan, that is the collectors to solicit within their own denomination anywhere, instead of dividing the village into wards. The following were appointed: C. M. church, Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Thos. McKay; Church of England, Miss Hatch and Miss Smith; M. E. church, Miss Jennie Wescott and Miss L. Girdwood; Presbyterian and Baptist churches, Miss Ralph and Miss Henry. The returns to be made by Dec. 10th. A resolution was passed recommending that hereafter subscriptions be taken at the annual meeting.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings last C. Panchard, D.S.C.K., of the Independent Order of Foresters, instituted Court Oakhills of that order at Stirling, with the following officers:

C.D.H.C.R.—T. G. Clute.
C.R.—Rev. T. Golden.
V.C.R.—Rev. R. Walker.
R.S.—Rev. R. H. Leitch.
F.S.—R. P. Gilbert.
Treas.—T. G. Clute.
S.W.—Chas. Keirl.
J.R.—Geo. Winters.
D.C.R.—Rev. A. M. Gray.
Chaplain—Rev. Mr. Stratton.
Physician—J. S. Sprague, M.D.

The court meets on the 2nd Monday of each month, but there are not learned. The Foresters are a secret society, existing mainly for the purposes of mutual insurance, etc., of which they have an excellent scheme in connection.

Nine years ago Rev. Mr. Stratton, while stationed at Picton, took the provident idea of building a home, with the view of having a refuge for himself and family when his days of usefulness in the ministry were over. A building site was purchased on the corner of Queen and Centre streets, one of the most desirable locations in Picton, and the building was duly put up, being a handsome two story brick cottage, with all the modern improvements, barn, etc. Immediately on its completion it was rented by one of the leading merchants, who has occupied it ever since. On Wednesday last, however, about noon, the rev. gentleman received the dispatching news by telegraph that on Tuesday night the whole place had been burned to the ground, and nothing saved. There was an insurance about sufficient to cover the remaining encumbrance, which leaves him with a vacant lot covered with charred ruins to represent the economies and self-denials of nine years of an active life. Mr. Stratton was far from well in body when the telegram arrived, and it can easily be imagined that the news would not help him to recover strength. He deserves, and will doubtless receive, the sympathy of all true friends in this hour of disappointment and blasted hopes.

The recent rains were very much needed, and have replenished the empty wells and cisterns.

Mr. Thos. McMurray, lecturer for the grand division, Sons of Temperance, was in the village on Saturday evening, to lecture in behalf of that order Wednesday night, but owing to the date clashing with Rev. Mr. Dowling's panorama, he will visit Stirling again. Mr. McMurray had been notified of the clash to date, but owing to a miscarriage of the mail the notice did not reach him.

Dr. Rossvally.

Says the Trent Valley Advocate:

"The Stirling NEWS-ARGUS of last week takes a back water in reference to Rossvally, the Jew. The "converted" showed Mr. Thompson his credentials, etc., and the resident minister had a private note from a Brooklyn divine saying Rossvally was "all right." From which the NEWS-ARGUS concludes it was wrong. Bro. Thompson did you never hear of two rogues "working" a community? In this case one appears to be in Brooklyn, the other in Canada.

"If the Advocate were not possessed of so strong a desire to establish a black reputation for Dr. Rossvally rather than a good one, it would never have been so reckless of the truth as to state that "THE NEWS-ARGUS takes back water" on any of its utterances in reference to that individual. We never made any charge against him, therefore never had any to take back. What we was done was to make reference, as in duty bound, to certain charges which reached Stirling just as we were going to press that week, and then, in common fairness, judgment was withheld until both sides received an equal hearing. This course neither the Advocate, nor many other papers or men that would be easily named, had the manliness to do. A cry of "stop thief" was raised, and was joined in by a large number ever ready and willing to kick a man down further rather than to stop a moment and see if he has any defence whatever to offer. On the other hand, we never affirmed, either publicly or privately, that Dr. Rossvally was not an impostor. What we said in generally understood was that we were willing to understand it, and it is not and will not be recorded from, viz., that giving his credentials the weight which the editor of the Advocate would expect credentials in his behalf from high authorities to receive among strangers, he (Rossvally) must reasonably be held free from the charges laid against him until they are proved at least as certainly as his good character is; and that if he is an impostor, then all those who encourage him so wrongly are worse than impostors for lending their names to impose him upon strangers. And these are not only "two," as the Advocate again dishonestly puts it—"one in Brooklyn and the other in Canada"—but dozens upon dozens of men whose names should command respect or they should be hurled from the positions they occupy. When it is proved a rogue then THE NEWS-ARGUS will have no hesitation in denouncing him; but so far we insist that the weight of evidence is in his favor, and that the Advocate taken our course in it would be able to say that it had done simple justice to both sides.

Since the foregoing was written, we have received the Brooklyn (N. Y.) daily Times of Saturday last, which contains the following paragraph, which naturally shows that where Rossvally is best known—at home—he is considered worthy to occupy the pulpit of one of the leading churches of the city. If he is an impostor, how deeply is that pulpit degraded:

Zion A. M. E. church, corner of South Third nine of the Brooklyn Eleventh streets—the church will be occupied on Sunday evening at 7:30 by Rev. Dr. L. Rossvally, late converted Jew. Subject, "That Jew. Who and what is he? Why should we Hear Him." Seats free. All are cordially invited.

LETTERS FROM READERS.

It is to be distinctly understood that any opinions expressed in communications are those of the writers—not necessarily of any one else. Under no circumstances will any letter be inserted unless the real name of the author is in possession of the editor.

To the Editor of The News-Argus.

MR. EDITOR—Permit me to call the attention of the public, through your paper, to the disgraceful way in which the street committee are having the sidewalk built east of Dr. Parker's new premises, going north. If it is not changed at once, I sincerely hope some one will take the matter in hand and pull it down. It is fully eight or nine inches too high. I hope the reeve, if we have one except in name, will use his jurisdiction in this matter. The balance of the city fathers seem like the man who, when his wife was lighting the house, said he never saw a light he took so little interest in. Take a little interest, Mr. Councillor, in the duties you agreed to perform for the corporation to the best of your ability, else we may be obliged to go about with a portable step-ladder for mounting sidewalks in Stirling.

More Reflections by an Older Settler.

To the Editor of The News-Argus.

I see in your paper "Trent valley reflections by an old settler," a correspondent of the Trenton Courier. I beg to differ with him in some of his statements. He seems to know very little about the locality he is writing about, or he would not state that the dam at Chisholm's rapids backed the water up to Healey Falls. The water is backed nearly up to Percy Boom. It could not back the water over Rainey's Falls and up to Healey Falls if the dam at Chisholm's was fifty feet high. There were very few had deeded land at that time. It all belonged to the government and the Canada company. Those who had bought paid from 50c. to $3 per acre, and the government gave them from $7 to $10 per acre damages, and they complain the same line that they sold when the water is low for pasture and meadow. As for the tears the old man shed, they were as scarce as hens' teeth. As for the thousands of acres drowned by the dam, the report of Mr. George Rainey, I think, is at 1,000 acres. The correspondent says when the government engineers came along that there was anxious suspense, but still hopes, but when the railway came there were blighted hopes and ruined homes. He also says we were ruled by a military chief that stopped the works. It was the rebellion in 1837 and 1838 that caused the works to stop. Mr. Editor, I am the oldest settler living at Chisholm's rapids, where I settled in 1836. There was not a house in sight between Frankford and Chisholm's rapids, and no bridge across the river at Frankford. We now have a county gravel road and a county bridge across the river Trent at Chisholm's rapids; we have the Central Ontario cars running past my door from Picton, and they are driving the work to completion as fast as men and money can do it; the steam shovel is working early and late loading the gravel trains, and I am told by judges that the railroad bridge across the river is second to none in the dominion. The reason I settled in this part of the country was the Trent valley canal. When I settled here the surveyors' stakes stood where they were planted for the improvement of the inland waters of the Newcastle district. I still hope to live to ride on a steamer from the bay of Quinte to Georgian bay, with the large expenditure there has been made. The Hon. Lewis Wallbridge's opinion is that with the large expenditure making now it was sure to be built, whatever government is in power. I will quote the opinion of another statesman, the late Hon. Edmund Murney: "If the canal at that time had been built, it would make a town from Chisholm's rapids to Stirling." The pioneers of this section of country had a good deal to contend with. Forty and fifty years ago there was no market-house in the town of Belleville; the farmer had to peddle his produce in the street, and take trade for what he sold. It was hard on the settler to make land payments and pay taxes. The Hon. Bills Flint was the first man who paid cash for wheat. I have sold wheat at 50c. per bushel, rye at 30c., oats at 15c., butter 8c. per lb. There were no pianos in the farm houses, or covered carriages. The best music in the farm house was the spinning-wheel and loom. No reapers and mowers. All the work was done by the bone and sinews of the hardy sons of toil, and I would be safe in saying there was not one door-log farm under mortgage in the township of Sidney, only those that were purchasing land. Now as we stand, with all the modern improvements, the sons of many of the old settlers are losing the farms that their fathers made. The cause is too bad living, and we hope they may do better.

Never give up is the secret of glory.
Nothing so wise can philosophy teach.

Chisholm's rapids.

Colborne will have a bicycle club.

Gilmour & Co. have removed their office from Madoc.

R. W. Turner, Campbellford, has lately taken from one-quarter acre of ground a crop of 350 cords of stove.

W. J. Hunter has established a line of hacks in Belleville, and has purchased several neat carriages and coupes.

Geo. Q. Dowler, late headmaster of the Brighton public school, left on the 5th inst. to fill an engagement with the World Publishing Co., New York, as their agent in Australia, New Zealand, etc.

On the 9th, as the workmen in Smith's flouring mill, Campbellford, were in the act of lowering a large water-wheel to the place prepared for it, the chain which suspended it snapped asunder, and it fell below several feet and was broken. It was completely destroyed, and a new one had to be ordered.

The works on the Trent valley canal are progressing favorably. The contractors for the locks at Fenelon Falls and Buckhorn are now proceeding with the masonry work for the lock walls, and have a large force of men employed. It is to be hoped the contract for a section on the lower Trent will shortly receive the attention of the government.

D. E. Howatt, of the Bay View farm, Deseronto, dep'ted for New York to arrange the shipment of a Jersey bull and cow which have been secured at great expense. This new importation of stock is said to be far superior to any yet introduced on the farm, and will be a decided gain to the stock-raising interests of this part of Canada.

A number of gentlemen interested in the extension of the B. & N. H. R. northwards met Friday night last at Belleville. There were present: A. F. Wood M.P.P., E. D. O'Flynn, Dr. Loomis, Alex. Brown, Ald. Dickson, Thomas Kelso, and R. C. Clute. After a lengthened conversation a subcommittee was appointed to confer with John Bell, solicitor, relative to the charter of the Midland railway, which has authority to build the road to Bancroft. The question of extending the line to Mattawa, on the Ottawa, to connect with the Canada Pacific, and thence to Hudson bay, was discussed.

W. Atkinson, of Campbellford, and A. Denmark, of Seymour, took a journey to Burnt Lake, in a canoe and on foot. The passage was a rough one, as they were compelled to carry the canoe over portages, and to wade three miles through a swamp in which they sometimes sank to their knees in water; but after a three days' journey they reached the desired hunting ground. Having only a few hours to spare after their arrival, they started out on the hunt and slayed three deer. They report deer as being unusually numerous in the Burnt Lake section, and they might have been surfeited with sport had they been able to remain longer.

After nearly four years of expensive experiments, success seems, at last, to have crowned the Bathbun company's efforts to discover satisfactory methods of utilizing the refuse from their mills. Not only will gas of a superior quality be eliminated from this refuse, but various other useful products will also be evolved. We might instance among others fine charcoal, suitable for the manufacture of gunpowder, for use in refrigerators, and as a disinfectant for stables, cesspools, and various other purposes. Then by different chemical combinations there will also be formed acetates of lime, sugar of lead, wood alcohol, pine tar, and a long list of commodities, useful in various arts. The company is to be congratulated on the success of their enterprise, which opens up a new era in the history of the milling world.

The Bell Telephone Co. have reached Trenton, and have erected their poles, immense tall sticks with two cross-bars eight feet long and provided with pins for wires. The poles will be painted throughout—eight feet high red and the rest blue. The agency has been given to H. Meade, a very central place. Mr. Meade will employ a person to look after it, and the office will be in a room upstairs. The tariff of fees is not yet published. The yearly charge for a telephone is said to be $36.00 in a house and $35.00 in a place of business. It will connect with Montreal and every important place in the province of Ontario, and will be a powerful rival to the telegraph.

The North Hastings extension executive committee met on the 19th. It was stated that Mr. Daly, C.E., had reported verbally that he had found a practicable route from north of Madoc, running through Tedorsat of Salmon lake via L'Amable to Bancroft. The committee, knowing that there were large iron deposits in Wollaston and Faraday, had instructed Mr. Daly to examine into the feasibility of a route through those townships, but Mr. Daly having stated that a route through those townships was not practicable, the committee, being of the importance of that route, not only in opening the country, but in securing the powerful iron interests in assisting to procure a government grant, have secured the services of Mr. Bailey to make a further survey of those two townships, to see if a practicable route could possibly be secured. Upon the reports of Mr. Daly and Mr. Bailey, the committee will decide upon the route to be taken. The residents of the rear townships are very enthusiastic over the prospects of railway facilities to the front in the near future.

The Legend Beautiful.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

"Hasty thou stayed, I must have fled!"
That is what the vision said.

In his chamber all alone,
Kneeling on the floor of stone,
Prayed the Monk in deep contrition
For his sin of indecision,
Prayed for greater self-denial
In temptations and in trial;
It was nothing by the trial
And the Monk was all alone,
Suddenly, as if it lightened,
All unwonted splendour brightened
All within him and without him
In that narrow cell of stone;
And he saw the Blessed Vision
Of our Lord, with light Elysian
Like a vesture wrapped about Him,
Like a garment round Him thrown.

Not as crucified and slain,
Not in agonies of pain,
Not with bleeding hands and feet,
Did the Monk his Master see;
But as in the village street,
In the house or harvest-field,
Halt and lame and blind He healed,
When He walked in Galilee.

In an attitude imploring,
Hands upon his bosom crossed,
Wondering, worshipping, adoring,
Knelt the Monk in rapture lost.
"Lord!" he thought, "in Heaven that rognest,
Who am I that thus Thou deignest
To reveal Thyself to me?
Who am I, that from the centre
Of Thy glory Thou shouldst enter
This poor cell my guest to be?"

Then amid his exaltation,
Loud the convent bell appalling,
From its belfry calling, calling,
Rang through court and corridor,
With persistent iteration
He had never heard before.

It was now the appointed hour
When alike, in shine or shower,
Winter's cold or summer's heat,
To the convent portals came
All the blind and halt and lame,
All the beggars of the street,
For their daily dole of food,
Dealt them by the brotherhood;
And their almoner was he
Who upon his bended knee,
Wrapt in silent ecstasy
Of divinest self-surrender,
Saw the Vision and the splendour.

Deep distress and hesitation
Mingled with his admiration;
Should he go or should he stay?
Should he leave the poor to wait
Hungry at the convent gate
Till the Vision passed away?
Should he slight his heavenly guest,
Slight this visitant celestial,
For a crowd of ragged, bestial
Beggars at the convent gate?
Would the Vision there vouchsafe
To remain, this Vision once again?

Then a voice within his breast
Whispered, audibly and clear,
As if to the outward ear:
"Do thy duty; that is best;
Leave unto Thy Lord the rest!"

Straightway to his feet he started,
And, with longing look intent
On the Blessed Vision bent,
Slowly from his cell departed,
Slowly on his errand went.

At the gate the poor were waiting,
Looking through the iron grating,
With that terror in the eye
That is only seen in those
Who amid their wants and woes
Hear the sound of doors that close
And of feet that pass them by;
Grown familiar with disfavour,
Grown familiar with the savour
Of the bread by which men die!

But to-day, they know not why,
Like the gate of Paradise
Seemed the convent door to rise,
Like a sacrament divine
Seemed to them the bread and wine.
In his heart the Monk was praying,
Thinking of the homeless poor,
What they suffer and endure;
What we see not, what we see;
And the inward voice was saying;
"Whatsoever thing thou doest
To the least of Mine and lowest,
That thou doest unto Me."

Unto Me! But had the Vision
Come to him in beggar's clothing,
Come a mendicant imploring,
Would he then have knelt adoring,
Or have listened with derision
And have turned away with loathing?
Thus his conscience put the question,
Full of penitence and zeal,
At length, with hurried pace,
Toward his cell he turned his face,
And beheld the convent bright
With a supernatural light,
Like a luminous cloud expanding
Over floor and wall and ceiling.

But he paused with awestruck feeling
At the threshold of his door;
For the Vision still was standing
As he left it there before,
When the convent bell appalling,
From its belfry calling, calling,
Summoned him to feed the poor.
Through the long hour intervening
It had waited his return,
And he felt his bosom burn,
Comprehending all the meaning,
When the Blessed Vision spoke
"Hadst thou stayed I must have fled!"

The Old Schoolmaster.

LEE O. HARRIS.

He sat at his desk at the close of day,
For he felt the weight of his many years;
His forehead was high, and his hair was gray,
And his eyes were dim with the falling tears.

The school was out, and his task was done,
And the hour seemed now so strangely still,
As the red beam of the setting sun
Stole silently over the window-sill.

Stole silently into the twilight gloom;
And the deepening shadows fell athwart
The vacant seats and vacant room,

And the vacant place in the old man's heart;
For his school had been all in all to him,
Who had no wife, no children, no land,
so gold, [dim,
But his frame was weak and his eyes were
And the fat was issued at last—"Too old."

He bowed his head on his trembling hands
A moment, as one who bend to pray;
"Too old!" they say, and the school demands
A wiser and younger head to day.
"Too old! too old!" these men forget
It was I who guided their tender years;
Their hearts were hard, and they gibed not
My trembling lips and my falling tears.

"Too old! too old!" it was all they said.
I looked in their faces one by one, [lead;
But they turned away, and my heart was
Dear Lord, it is hard, but Thy will be done.
The night stole on, and a blacker gloom
Was over the vacant benches cast;
The master sat in the silent room, [past.
But his mind was back in the days long
And the shadows took, to his tear-dimmed sight, [thrilled
Dear well-known forms. His heart was
With the blessed sense of his own delight,
For the benches all were filled;
And he slowly rose as his desk, and took
His well-worn Bible that lay within,
He said, as he lightly tapped the book,
"It is the hour—for school begin."

And he smiled as his kindly glances fell
On the well-beloved faces there—
John, Rob, and Will, and laughing Nell,
And blue eyed Bess, with the golden hair,
And Tom, and Charley, and Ben, and Paul,
Who stood at the head of the spelling class—
All in their places—and yet they all
Were lying under the graveyard grass.

He read the book, and he knelt to pray,
And he called the classes to recite
For the darkness all had rolled away
From a soul that was pure as a crystal light.
With words of praise for a work of care,
With a kind reproof for a broken rule,
The old man totter'd to his home,
Through the spectral rank of his shadow school.
Thus all night long, till the morning came,
And darkness folded her robe of gloom,
And the sun looked in, with his eye of flame,
On the vacant seats of the silent room.
The wind stole over the window sill, [cout,
And swept through the aisles in a sweet
But the face of the master was white and still. [out.
His work was finished and his school was

Life in Utah.

If one wishes to see Mormon life in all its primitiveness and simplicity, he must not look for it in Salt Lake City, for there it is overshadowed by much of the outside world. No; if you wish to see the Mormon life, the Mormonism you must strike out into the country districts.

A few evenings ago I had the pleasure of attending a genuine dancing party of the Latter Day Saints (they don't like to be called Mormons). This was at a small town nestled away in the Wasatch Mountains, about 150 miles south of the metropolis of Utah. The dance was held in what is called the Ward Meeting House, is plain stone building used for general public purposes.

The hour for opening was 7 p.m. I was there on time. Wishing to observe and attention or entering was that the ladies and gentlemen sat separately—the men on the right and the ladies on the left. At the end of the hall was a raised platform, upon which sat the orchestra, which consisted of a first and second violin and organ. The nationality of those present was very distinct and easily detected. The Scandinavian element predominated, but there was a sprinkling of English, Scotch, Irish, Welsh, and Swiss, while the Ohio twang and the Missourian's slow could also be heard. I had a happy contented look, there being no attempt at formality, but each appeared to feel as if he or she was at home with members of their own family.

When I arrived the dancing had not commenced, and there was quite a buzz of conversation. Presently the floor manager called out, "Please be come to order." Brother Brown, will you open?" immediately all was silence, and every head bowed in reverence. Brother Brown re peoded by walking to the platform and offering a brief but earnest extemporaneous prayer, in which he asked the Lord to be with them during the time of their amusement and to keep all harm and wrongdoing from these present.

The floor manager then gave a number to each man who wished to dance and when all had numbers given to them he called out "Numbers one to eight, take your partners for a collie." There was about eight sets and rushed across the room and secured partners. There was no waiting for introductions, and now they stood in readiness on the fl or, falling into conversation with their ladies. The music struck up, the caller intoned the figure, and the dancers started off as if their very lives were at stake.

The Dance were remarkably graceful in their movements, and, of course, there was the usual quantum of verdant youths who didn't know what to do with their legs. There were many pretty, rosy-cheeked lasses among the fair sex. All were neat and clean, but no attempt was made at show in dress, plain cotton and woolen fabrics being the rule. Some few of the girls made a faint attempt with simple ribbons and laces. Many of the men did not appear to have made any special evening dress, with the exception of a very liberal use of soap and water. Others, again, were dressed in well made, serviceable broadcloth of home manufacture.

I could not help but notice many of the young men born and raised in this mountain region. They are perfect giants—hale, hearty, vigorous. Don't ever impute to polygamy the cause of muscular decline in man, for here I had occular proof to the contrary.

When the first dance was concluded the gentlemen escorted their partners to their seats, and then retired to their own. Then another batch was immediately called for, and the fun was repeated. The polka or waltz, round dancing, as it is called, is not, by strict rules, allowed, although in fact it was among the fair sex. All were neat and clean, but no attempt was made at show in dress, plain cotton and woolen fabrics being the rule. Some few of the girls made a faint attempt with simple ribbons and laces. Many of the men did not appear to have made any special evening dress, with the exception of a very liberal use of soap and water. Others, again, were dressed in well made, serviceable broadcloth of home manufacture.

I could not help but notice many of the young men born and raised in this mountain region. They are perfect giants—hale, hearty, vigorous. Don't ever impute to polygamy the cause of muscular decline in man, for here I had occular proof to the contrary.

Unto Me! But had the Vision
Come to him in beggar's clothing,
Come a mendicant imploring,
Would he then have knelt adoring,
Or have listened with derision
And have turned away with loathing?
Thus his conscience put the question,
Full of penitence and zeal,
At length, with hurried pace,
Toward his cell he turned his face,
And beheld the convent bright
With a supernatural light,
Like a luminous cloud expanding
Over floor and wall and ceiling.

But he paused with awestruck feeling
At the threshold of his door;
For the Vision still was standing
As he left it there before,
When the convent bell appalling,
From its belfry calling, calling,
Summoned him to feed the poor.
Through the long hour intervening
It had waited his return,
And he felt his bosom burn,
Comprehending all the meaning,
When the Blessed Vision spoke
"Hadst thou stayed I must have fled!"

A Dying Man Running Away With an Engine.

As an extra freight train was going west from Pittsburg recently the drawhead of the car next to the engine was pulled out of place near Derry station. The engineer, Wm. Bley, and the fireman, Jas. Maloney, and a switchman, John Bley, went to work to repair the injury. Bley and Maloney were underneath the front platform of the car when the engineer of the pusher at the end of the train, not knowing of the accident, started his engine. Bley was caught under the forward truck and crushed to death. Maloney was caught by the platform and crushed against the tender of the engine. His left arm was broken in two places, his shoulder was crushed, and his side was laid bare. He was carried to the engine and laid upon the floor. He suddenly jumped up and as a fit of delirium pulled the valve wide open. He had become raving mad from intense suffering. The engine started with frightful speed on a down grade. As the engine neared Latrobe, six miles from the scene of the accident, it was going with terrible velocity. Reaching the end of the grade the engine slackened its speed and finally came to a stop. Maloney was found in a dying condition on the floor.

On a steamer lately arrived from abroad during the prevailing high seas a traveller exclaimed to his very stylish, but just then pale and distressed looking daughter: "What, Grace, you seasick? Looking around at the rest of the company hugging the rails, she faltered out: "Y-y-you don't s-s-suppose, papa, I'd be out of f-f-fashion, do you?"

A Prison Visit.

Rev. Charles Garratt, the much respected President of the Wesleyan Conference of England, said in a recent speech:

The week before last I went into Manchester jail. We have got a new and magnificent one, and as long as you live come during your visit to this town will have to build prisons to hold the drunkards they make. I went into that prison, and I stood on one spot where with one glance I could command 1,000 cells. Picture those 1,000 cells, and every one tenanted. I went from door to door down those terrible aisles with the warden, and at a chaplain, half a door after door was opened I put the question. "How came you here?" The answer that met me in almost every case was, "Drink." I went down the gloomy aisles, and it came like a funeral knell, drink, drink, drink. The Protestant, the Catholic, the educated, the uneducated, the young and the old, till my heart sickened and my brain seemed on fire. The chaplain said, "You have had enough, let us go." The Tread-mill. I went, and I shall never forget it. Before me were perhaps fifty men with dismal yellow covering, and with black square upon them. There was the treadmill, and I saw them stepping, and with black square upon them. There was the treadmill, and I saw them stepping, and nothing to do but tread the gloomy wheel. I spoke to one of them and said him, "Are you here for the first time?" "Yes, sir," he replied, apparently glad of being relieved from tread-mill toil. "What place of worship do you attend?" "Church of England." I went on, and imagined how they looked at me when the man replied, "Gravel-lane Chapel." "That is my own chapel," I said. "Have you been in any Sunday-school?" "Yes, sir, twelve years." "Have you any family?" "Yes, sir." "Where are they?" "Don't know, sir." "What brought you here?" "Drink, sir, I wish it had been a guinea a gallon before I had ever touched a drop." Again came the memory of that funeral knell, drink, drink, drink. The young, the educated, the uneducated, no respector of persons, bringing them first to the jail, and ultimately hurrying them down to hell. I say, let us stand before the evils of our country, and try to ascertain their cause. Let our Christian Ministers do it. We are bound to do it. We are bound by our loyalty to our country, and above all, by our loyalty to our common father, God. I go, then, to the prisons and ask, what brought you here? Out comes the answer, drink. I go into the workhouse and I ask, what brought you here? Out comes the answer, drink. I go to the lunatic asylum, and it is the same. I look down into the damnation of hell, and from millions of voices comes the response, drink. I am no philosopher, I am no orator, I am a plain, blunt man; but I have common sense enough to see that if we remove the cause the effect must cease. Christian brethren! If we could gather on some vast plain the victims of this accursed by drink, both victims and sufferers, what should we behold? Husband and wife, brother and sister, parents and children—ten thousand thousand sufferers! Oh, that I could make the Christian Church walk in procession right through the serried ranks, that their hearts might be wrung by the tears and cries of anguish of these sufferers.

Important People.

The story told lately about Matthew Arnold, and Thomas Carlyle is very characteristic and deserves repetition. Matthew the immaculate, it seems, called on the "True Thomas" sometime before the death of the latter, and found him dull, and disappointed. He went away with the impression that it was all over with the "Sage," and, meeting a mutual friend, said so. Away hurried the mutual friend to Carlyle, and was rejoiced to find the "old man eloquent" greatly better. The question was casually asked if he had had any visitors lately. "Oh, yes. Matt Arnold was here for about half an hour, talking away as usual mostly about himself." True to the letter about Matthew, but, true also of a great many more who have been reared for being high minded than has the apostle of sweetness and light. Thomas himself had a very fair opinion of a certain personage who need not be named, and some of the great men of his time been, and are, equally impressed with a sense of the mighty obligations under which they have brought the world by the mere fact of their existence in it. There are poor fellows of this kind even in our midst, who are equally sure with Matthew that when the Almighty had finally finished the universe, he broke the mould. The way in which these walk the streets, is a caution. They want to appear unconcerned, but cannot manage it. They are so haunted with the delusion that they are the observed of all observers, that their naturally weak, shambling gait becomes always weaker and more shambling, and they look as if they were sure that every knot of talkers at the street corners were speaking about them, and that passers were whispering to each other as they passed by, "Behold he," "and that!" Oh you donkeys! Don't pray don't. You may walk the streets for ten hours a day for a month and be body-snatched bodily by all Type Ye, enquire of a friend who these cross garteed, foolish looking Malvolio sort of fellows may be, who shake their heads and roll their eyes as if they were porcelain manikins in a grocer's window. The world is too busy to take any notice of you, and if you were to hint that you are the celebrated so and so, everybody would not be flattering to your vanity.

EASILY CHANGED.—Mark Twain in his "Tramp Abroad," gives the following:—When we got back to the hotel King Arthur's round table was ready for us, in white drapery, and the head waiter and his first assistant, in swallow tails and white cravats, served the soup and the hot plates at once. Mr. X. had ordered the dinner, and when the wine came on he picked up a bottle, glanced at the label, and, pointing to the grave, the melancholy, the sepulchral head waiter, and said it was not the sort of wine he had asked for. The waiter picked up the bottle, cast his mournful eyes on it, and said, "It is true; I beg pardon." Then he turned on his subordinate and calmly said, "Bring another label." The man went off and brought the present label off with his hand and laid it aside—it had been newly put on, its paste was still wet. When the new label came in he put it on our French wine being now turned into German wine, according to desire. The head waiter went blandly about his white office as if this sort of thing was of miracle was a common and easy thing to him. Mr. X. said he had not known before that there were people honest enough to do this miracle in public, but he was aware that thousands upon thousands of labels were imported into America from Europe every year to enable dealers to furnish to their customers in a quiet and inexpensive way all the different kinds of foreign wines they might require.

SCIENTIFIC CRUELTY.

A Sunday Among Some Parisian Students—Student Physical Experiments in Vivisection—Tortures of the Victims.

A Paris letter to the Cincinnati Enquirer says: I was standing under one of the boulevard trees on Sunday afternoon between 3 and 9 o'clock last Sunday evening, smoking a cigarette, and enjoying the fresh air, when I left the Variétés, close by, or to stroll down the Boulevard des Italiens to the Théâtre Cluvernay, where Robert Houdin used to perform his mysteries. The two boulevards are really part of one long street extending from Chaussée d'Antin to Rue Madeline; but according to local custom the street is arbitrarily divided into half a dozen sections, each having a given each division. Thus, the Boulevard de la Madeine, des Capucins, des Italiens, Montmartre, Haussmann, and still farther on, Rochechouart, and it came like a funeral knell, drink, drink, drink. The Protestant, the Catholic, the educated, the uneducated, the young and the old, till my heart sickened and my brain seemed on fire. The chaplain said, "You have had enough, let us go." AN EXTRAORDINARY STORY.

How a Man Escaped from the Gallows to Die on His Release from Jail.

A telegram from Lackawaxen, Pa., to the New York Times says: Thirty-six years ago this month two young Irishmen emigrated to this country together. Their passage money was borrowed, and they landed in Philadelphia. In 1848 they were both members of a gang of laborers employed in the construction of the New York and Erie Railroad, and were working at this place. Late in the fall of that year Gilliflan gave up his situation and went to Newburgh, where he intended to engage in farming. Callinghan remained in the employ of the railroad company. The aqueduct which carries the Delaware and Hudson canal across the river at this place was then building, under the direction of a Mr. Hopkins. Among the men employed on this work were several English carpenters, and there was such a strong enmity between them and the Irish railroad laborers that serious brawls and fights were of almost daily occurrence. On the evening of the 12th of December, 1848, the carpenters had just come for their dinner. The Irishmen were in the bar-room in the basement. One of the carpenters, a Scotchman named Ryan, made the remark, as he went up stairs to the dining room, that if the Irishmen were over this way they would have come down to him for dinner he would throw them out. When he returned the laborers were still there, and proceeded forthwith to carry out his threat. Callinghan drew a knife and killed Keys by stabbing him to the heart. Callinghan was arrested and lodged in jail at Milford. He was tried at the February term of the Pike county court in 1849, found guilty of the first-degree murder, and sentenced to be hanged. A motion for a new trial was overruled. The year 1849 was the last year of the reign of the governor who occupied the chair in Pennsylvania, and it expired without the incumbent having signed Callinghan's death warrant. His sentence therefore became void, and Callinghan lay in jail, in daily expectation of hearing his doom announced, from February, 1849, until after the year 1852, without his case being settled. Those now living who visited him in his cell describe the effect which the great suspense to which he was subjected had upon him as having been terrible. When he was placed in prison he was a strong, robust man. He would say that he maintained for nearly four years for some news of what his fate was to be were him placed to be taken out and hanged, or for some one to kill him and put him out of his misery. In November, 1852, he was brought out to the supreme court, of which Jeremiah S. Black was the chief justice, for a writ of error, in order that Callinghan's case might be reviewed. The writ was issued, and argument on it resulted in Callinghan's discharge from custody. He was a dying man when he stepped out of the prison door

FASHION NOTES.

Wool costumes are the correct street wear.

Silk scrutache appears among metallic braids.

Blouse effects on tight waists remain fashionable.

Silk affects English fashions at the moment.

Wool scutache on gray velvet is considered very lovely.

There is a return to favor to clinging dress draperies.

Russian green combines with black, gray or light red.

Silk costumes are relegated to home and carriage wear.

The Empress Frederick gives to a very lady some of her long clothes.

Silk flounces are vandyked, scalloped and sometimes pinked.

Sleeves, as a rule, are short, and are ponderous in bulk and front.

Black stockings remain the first fancy of fashionable women.

Brides on the continent no longer wear glove at the church door.

Balmoral skirts are wider, but the joke about the hips is unavoidable.

The silks, satins, and brocades of this season are exceedingly beautiful.

It is again fashionable to wear a fancy pin in the bonnet but under the chin.

Velveteen is an adopted name; all cotton stuffs take the general name of velvet.

Colored flannel skirts edged with scollop lace are preferred to white ones or balmoralas.

The sabot sleeve full its own length, and so popular in England, is gaining favor here.

Of all the forms of the feminine wardrobe that of fur bids fair to be the most popular.

Parisian dressmakers discard all sleeves except the close coat sleeve for street costumes.

The fashionable silvery gray is called ferrade bois, or wood smoke, to distinguish it from the brown London smoke; the new red is rouge sanglant, or blood red.

Long pelisses, made of finely checked twilled cloth or cheviots, and trimmed with five inch bands of fur, will be much worn upon the promenade this winter.

To freshen a last year's dress a dressy loose sack of cream draped like a Moliere vest to fall in two puffs are used; they have a velvet lace collar, and are easily adjusted to a plain waist.

Scarfs, panels, either plain or kilted, sashes, waistcoats, and Watteau tunics, made of Roman striped or plaided novelty lewis, are again worn as accessories to dresses of a dark monochrome.

Ladies' cloth of darkest cardinal, made into skirts that had in vids panels with kilts intersecting, the panels covered with Russian embroidery in colors of cardinal, green, and gold, compose one of the most stylish and elegant of walking costumes of the season. The long apron overskirt is caught up with colored silk cords, and the cardinal velvet Tyrolean cape is lined with plaided surah in colors matching the shades of the embroidery.

Many plush capes are worn just now, and with a good deal of wadding; they are trimmed by warm as fur. The collars are high and half sleeves set in in the fashionable way. If cordings are expected to match the costume worn with them, or, otherwise, to correspond to that of the dress trimmings. A few shade of plush, very thick and heavy, exactly matching the color of natural beaver, it is much used for pelerines and shoulder capes. These come with jockey capes and muffs to match.

Small fruits, including rosy apples, pears, apricots, plums, grapes, and peaches of natural size, are seen upon the newly-arrived brocaded velvet and satins from Lyons. A deep orange-colored satin shot with silver is now exhibited by a New York firm. This ground work is brocaded with large crimson velvet egg plums in clusters. Another pattern has a ground of silver-colored Ottoman silk ornamental heavy cord, brocaded with deepred cocomb flowers of natural size and a heavy white Ottoman silk is covered with white thistle blooms, the feathery portion being made by full tufts of raised chenille filaments.

The new "Spanish mantle," which is to take the place of the Rackoczy for lined circular with three wraps, for novelty in attire, is very becoming to tall slender ladies. This wrap is uncommonly elegant and graceful, and is made of black brocaded velvet and trimmed around the entire garment with black Russian fur. Around the neck is a very deep collar of the same fur, which covers the shoulder like a cape. The wrap is lined with dark red plush and is much too heavy for street wear, being designed expressly for carriage use, and as a garment to be thrown aside in a heated room. Models much in the same style for evening wear are made of brocaded satin or velvet, lined with quilted satin, and trimmed with chenille fringes, fur, or silbiline etc.

Fur is always the handsomest of winter trimmings, and the fortunate possessor of good furs need not follow the prevailing craze for mammoth trimmings, for sable, ziblinette, is by no means satisfactory, and though comparatively inexpensive, the necessity for frequent renewal materially adds to the expense of the wearer of such dress of which marabout is the adjunct. Nevertheless, motives of economy do not deter people from wearing a great deal of marabout trimming. It is certainly very light and fleecy looking, and always becoming, and is very popular for trimming house dresses. Marabout is dyed most of the new delicate tints as well as in the deep artistic shades of green olive, brown, ruby, and blue.

How to Train a Boy.

The modern prejudice against corporal punishment does not seem to have penetrated to India. A magistrate of the Government of Secunderabad recently received the following petition from a parent: "I most humbly and respectfully beg to bring to your Honor's notice that my boy, aged about 15 years, instead of going to school, joins bad company, goes to the tank to catch fish, and does other things which are long here and there. The schoolmaster warned him and flogged him several times; he never cares to. I request your Honor to permit me to have a chain for one of his legs, with a log of wood attached to the same, in order that he may feel ashamed, and keep his hands off which fish or green he shall every pray."

Women have fans always, and frequently a talent for making themselves agreeable to new acquaintances. A lady is journing a certain New England town of this sort and was introduced to another lady who had registered from Cleveland. "So you are from Ohio," graciously commenced the former; "what is your husband a candidate for?"

Ethel—I can't see what Maud can see in that ungainly, awkward fellow, Tom Bangs. Madge—My dear, it's becoming perfectly absurd. Only think! The gardener told the cook yesterday that he hoped the Ugly would stay for another fortnight, for positively there was no necessity to roll the gravel walks while they kept company promenading up and down.

Advices to those about to marry are always in order, and are generally disregarded. Some old curmudgeons simply say: Don't. Others condescend to particulars and say, Don't marry for money or beauty or showy accomplishments, but for virtue and truth and genuine affection. All very easily said. But when a wretched young fellow is in love doesn't he see all virtues in his beloved whether they are there or not?

Where to Walk.

A crowd of loves from sea and land
Come buzzing, twinkling, all about me,
Whene'er I take my stick in hand,
Declaring none will leave without me.

But one pulls this way and one that
And sore perplexed am I among them;
For if I go with this part but
The others all will swear I wrong them.

"Think of the pines," one urches cry,
"A spring is yon perfumed hollow!"
"Nay, think of my dear Fount's cool grove!"
Another says, "and me you'll follow."

The Sea that shows her laughing teeth
The Rivulet that runs to meet me,
The Brook's bank, that throws its wreath
Thorn set, about my knees to greet me.

Ech an embassador will send Instructed not to leave without me,
Sadly some new retreat will wend,
And take them flatteries all about me.

PRETTY MISS BROADLANDS.

BY MAY N. PRESCOTT.

Some people seemed to think that it was almost a pity Miss Broadlands should be so pretty, so much prettier than other girls, she thought, sadly, and they appeared to love her a grudge for her beauty, so much so that if she had been poor or simply rich, she would not have been so hard to bear, and they could have forgiven her, moreover, if she had been ugly. Lovers were always about her. Sending flowers and bonbons, writing verses, and declaring sighs, which made her life to be hard.

Quite natural that a girl with a fortune should not lack suitors, a friend said to her day, "Why don't you take one, Ethel? I would keep, dear, if you were as poor as my girls."

"I've half a doubt," she answered, gayly; "but the shall were honest."

She became more indifferent than before but this very indifference proved a fresh fascination, and another purse; that her money was but dross in her eyes; because she was more receptive to his flatteries, did not laugh at his half-tender nonsense, and toss it back to him with pretty sarcasm and raillery.

"If I am ever obliged to earn my living," she said on one occasion, when the subject of woman's wages and work was under discussion, "I shall become a nurse."

"Heaven grant that I may be an invalid at the time!" said Constant.

"And I," put in another admirer, "will be the attending physician."

"Why, you make something better than that," Constant added, aside, "you could be my house-keeper for me."

"If I every did, I would only succeed," she thought, regarding him "and never flirted or talked to me in the time merely; it money were not the root of evil."

Miss Broadlands was the most alone in the world, with her beauty and her money, but she did her splendid house with company, and in the dusk and gloom of the fine summer resort with friends come hither she made a pilgrimage to her mamma's business, Mr Stanhope, living in a neighboring city, to call her home, to whose stock, mind, After her return from one of these visits at one time it was observed by a friend the sharp-sighted, that she no longer, interchanged as freely as before; presently she had sold her saddle-horse, "I am going to try walking," she explained; "the doctors think it is healthier for me."

"But you are the picture of health," said Constant, with a tender glance, "I wish I had her half an hour of your society, you know, is worth a pound of cure."

Presently it leaked out that she had sold her fine large single garden, and she days the town was electrified to find the Broadlands estate under the hammer. Miss Broadlands had given up some little time before, it was rumored that she was in a training school for nurses—a rumor which was confirmed when she returned to enter a hospital. Society's gaze was fixed on Constant, who had grudged her her good fortune now said, "She is so pretty that pity is thrown away on her." Another said, "Poor thing! No doubt it is hard to lose money, but it is harder still never to have had any to lose." And the chorus was, "It is a shame!" Well, "we can not see her until we fall ill to go and." However, there were some who if were healed from her, cries and sympathies were no longer uncritical, in fact, she had passed out of fashion, but Miss Broadlands was not disconcerted. It was a new life, the world of patients, where she was a shining light. She had wearied of that other world of sham lovers and flatters. Here she was secure, people could be empted to make love to her over again, unless his heart were in it. Constant Stanley had been called abroad, by the serious illness of his father, a German era, before the final sale of Broadlands, which place, however, remained untenanted by the Broadlands family, and the sham lovers had been weighed in the balance and found wanting; how would it be with him? Was he true enough to love her whether her fortune or were poor? Was he candid enough? He came. She

A Place for Babies to Die.

From the Hamilton Tribune.

The course pursued by The Tribune in exposing the doubtful rate of mortality in the House of Bethlehem, at Ottawa, has received a signal and decisive vindication at the hands of those appointed by the council there to investigate the charges. The report of the committee gives them full credit by their promptness and zeal in their city of any stigma attached to the exile. The home is to be closed, as one principle upon which it has been conducted is declared to be radically wrong, though the sisters in charge are specially exonerated by the physicians from any personal responsibility for the condition of affairs. The number of deaths at the home during the past four years was 644 out of 739. The place must have been a very charnel house. Inherited disease may have caused a few of the deaths, but the doctors admit that the system of dry nursing is responsible for the larger number. An incident illustrating the practice in operation came under the doctors' notice at the moment of their inspection. It was then half-past eleven a.m., and a child was admitted into the house. It had been born that morning at a farm house in the village of L'Original, some fifty miles distant. Recall what a delicate creature a new born babe is and how sensitive its skin to the outdoor atmosphere, and then think of that little babe, taken from its mother at birth, deprived of all nourishment and comfort from the mother, carried fifty miles by train, and taken to a home, there to receive its food from a bottle. What wonder the babes die? this is the general treatment! A grave defect in the operation of the institution was the absence of any effort through the child to reclaim its mother. The taking of a child, as described, from the mother, and relieving her of all responsibility which it naturally placed upon her was really encouragement to go out into the world and again earn a livelihood at the price of her chastity. How different the course pursued in a somewhat similar institution at Hamilton! Here the mother not unrescued the child for the customary period of nine months, and in the meant me by assisting at laundry work contributes toward her own maintenance, the balance of the cost being made up by the charitable revenues of the home. Those nine months the mother is under beneficial influences, and it usually happens that instead of a creature being turned out as at Ottawa to sin again, a reclaimed woman is returned to society by the home, for the poor, fallen creature who sought shelter within its doors in the hours of her trouble. A word or so more and we have done with the subject, feeling confident that now the bad system has been destroyed, a good one will speedily take its place. That word or so is: Why did Dr. O'Reilly pass this dreadful mortality without a proper investigation and report? It is impossible to believe that he was ignorant as to the full import of the statistics; but if we do not believe it, then there is no other recourse than to admit that he was indifferent, and merely regards a visite to such institutions as ornamental and formal: They are not intended to discharge any useful public office. It is the duty of some one to impeach Dr. O'Reilly for negligence or incompetency—it is immaterial which.

News-Argus Clubbing List for 1884!

We have beenenabled to make very satisfactory clubbing arrangements for 1884 with a few of the best leading agricultural and other papers, put by in the time of our subscribers, and can now offer the following inducements:

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Rural Canadian together for $1.60. See advertisement elsewhere.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the American Farmer together for $1.35. The American Farmer is a neatly printed, well edited monthly, published at Fort Wayne, Ind., at $1 per year. We can supply it with our paper for $1.35. This is the best offer.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and Grip, Canada's now famous Cartoon sheet, for $2.60. Grip is published weekly at $2 per year, and every issue is full of wit and wisdom.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Weekly Globe together for $1.80.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Toronto Daily World for $3.10.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Montreal Weekly Herald for $1.85.

Samples of the papers named in this list can be seen at this office.

HOME MATTERS.

Rev. Mr. Stratton continues poorly, and has been unable to preach for two Sundays.

A second furnace has been put in the M. E. church, and the building can now be brought to a temperature of comfort.

Mr. A. Shannon has been employed by Mr. W. C. Reid, the energetic dealer in fruit trees, plants, etc., and will make his headquarters at Stirling, working entirely in this section.

The Fisk jubilee singers were poorly patronized on their last tour through this section. Their prices are rather extortionate, and many people undoubtedly feared to attend, while their singing is said by some to be quite inferior to their former efforts.

Dunk, son of Mr. Samuel Montgomery, of Campbellford, aged 13 years, on Saturday last was duckshooting from a boat on the river when his gun kicked, throwing him backward out of the boat, and he was drowned before he could be rescued. The body was recovered shortly after.

We are informed that different parties holding the Grand Junction railway debenture of the township of Rawdon are now sending to the reeve, the clerk, and others, notices to pay the interest coupons. The money for this purpose is deposited in the Bank of Commerce at Belleville, as provided, and is payable there only.

The ladies of St. John's church intend holding a Christmas tea, in connection with which will be a concert and Christmas tree, in Bennett's hall on Wednesday Dec. 26th. Those wishing to make presents to friends can utilize the tree, and donations will be gratefully received by the ladies, which may be left at the parsonage, at Mrs. Bedrick's, or at Mrs. Potts'.

The C. M. missionary meetings on the Stirling circuit were as successful, or more so, than usual. The deputations announced were in attendance, and the interest was satisfactory. The amount raised at the Stirling meeting on Wednesday night was $108.62. The amount at Reid's surpassed any previous year. A fuller statement will be given when the final returns are brought in.

It will be remembered that Sir John Macdonald was unseated in Lennox county through the corruption of agents, chiefly A. H. Roe, M.P.P. Roe seems to be a very wicked man—even too wicked for a politician, and has done his party incalculable mischief by his gross immorality and skepticism, the effect of which is seen in the new election held on Monday, when Mr. Allison, the Reform candidate, was elected over Mr. Pruyn, Conservative, by a majority of five votes. Perhaps this will be a lesson to both sides.

Mr. R. Roy, of Huntingdon, is possessed of a colt which is rather wild, and but few could handle it. On Sunday night, 19th, inst., some parties entered his barn, harnessed the colt to a buggy, and left for parts unknown. Mr. Roy telegraphed from Belleville, and Madoc to different points, and despatched men in all directions to search for the missing animal. Constable Sills, of Madoc, was the successful man, coming across the horse and buggy near Campbellford, where they had been turned loose into a field, but the thieves could not be found.

The miserable impecuniosity of soul which has always characterized the Ontario and its proprietor is again cropping out. Throughout newspaperdom it is an accepted practice for daily papers to exchange with all weeklies published in their own immediate vicinity, and especially in their own county. This courtesy has been extended to THE NEWS-ARGUS by the Intelligencer promptly, but very irregularly by the Ontario, which has always arrived with an unsatisfactory uncertainty. A month or two since, however, the daily stopped coming altogether, and in its stead was sent the weekly, which, being published the same time of week as THE NEWS-ARGUS, is utterly useless for the purposes to which exchanges are usually put, and the whole incident takes the form of an ill-bred snub to a friendly neighbor. The Ontario may keep both its daily and weekly, as we are not dependent upon either one for local news, as it is on its contemporaries.

Marmora News.

From Our Own Correspondent.

On Wednesday evening, 14th inst., the Marmora brass band gave the concert which had been advertised to come off at that time. The audience, knowing that the band had been but recently organized, did not expect the programme to be of the highest order, and consequently were not disappointed. Dr. Jones, having been nominated to the chair, gave a short address, in which he alluded to the great age of instruments such as are now used by brass bands. Following him the band gave a selection, which won great applause. The remainder of the programme consisted, with the exception of another piece by the band, of vocal and instrumental music given by ladies and gentlemen from Stirling and Madoc. The gold ring, which was competed for by Miss Conley, of Stirling, and Miss Pringle, of Marmora, was won by the latter, she having won $85, and Miss Conley $21. The band, however, in appreciation of Miss Conley's services, presented her with a silver bracelet, for which she thanked the audience. Financially the concert was a success. In other respects, if the programme had been gone through with a little more dispatch, and with shorter pauses between the pieces, we think the audience would have been better pleased.

A burglary was attempted here some time during Saturday night, 17th inst., in the store of Carscallen & Gilhooly. Nothing, however, was taken, as the two young men who sleep in a room over the store were awakened by the noise made by the would-be robbers and hastened down to see what was the matter. Before they could make their appearance, the thieves, fearing they were discovered, fled. No damage was done except the breaking of a pane of glass in one of the front doors, which it is supposed was smashed by the thieves in making their hurried exit. There were also indications of the thieves having visited some other houses in the place, but no losses are reported. Heads of families now are very carefully looking after revolvers and shotguns, so as to be ready to give these unwisited visitors a reception at the other evening occasion, should they think proper to return.

Mr. G. McWilliams has completed the alterations and improvements he had been for some time making in the house he bought of Mr. T. F. Pearce, and has moved his family and furniture into it. The new house is called the Royal Hotel. In honor of the occasion, the Marmora band, the other evening serenaded Mr. McM. and inmates of the house.

Madoc News.

From our own Correspondent.

A soiree was held last Friday evening in Rupert's Presbyterian church, for the purpose of procuring prizes for the public school children. The evening was everything that heart could wish, and the recent snow storm made the sleighing magnificent. Miss M. Beatty sang the opening song, after which both old and young (more particularly the small boys) fell to and did ample justice to the enjoyable repast furnished by the teachers' young lady friends. After tea Mr. Henry Robinson was unanimously elected chairman of the meeting. Rev. M. Oakley (C. M.) gave the speech of the evening. His advice to the young folk was simply excellent, and a number of them appeared as if they would be very willing to act upon it. Owing to the inability of the other speakers to attend, the spaces made by their absence were kindly filled by Miss M. Beatty, who, besides playing several instrumental solos, sang in her most lively and bewitching manner "Under the rose-tree," "Bonnie Dundee," and "He's only a boy, you know." Mr. Peters, of Eldorado, read in a masterly style a "Colored gentleman's experience of entering Heaven." A solo by Miss Connors, of Rawdon, was greatly appreciated. Miss English, accompanied by her sister, Miss R. English, sang "Cantilena" in an exceedingly sweet and pleasing manner. The benediction was pronounced by the rev. gentleman, after which the crowd dispersed, to their respective homes, feeling satisfied that a most enjoyable evening had been spent. Many thanks are to be given to the young ladies of the section, and to Mr. Meiklejohn, for their untiring efforts to make the meeting a success. The proceeds amounted to nearly $25.

Quiltings are all the rage around here. One was held at the home of our fair friends last week. A very pleasant time was spent by the young people in the evening.

It seems as if Christmas is to deprive us of all our teachers. Miss Reid returns to Lindsay, Miss McKinnel will spend vacation at home in Orilia, Mr. Meiklejohn takes a school near Campbellford, and Mr. Peters intends joining his friends in Manitoba.

Deer are very plentiful this season. Three young sportsmen succeeded in shooting three on the 22nd.

X AND Y.

The False Prophet.

The decisive victory achieved by the "false prophet," as cabled last week, puts an entirely new face upon matters in Egypt. The fall of Obeid, nearly 400 miles from the place Hicks Pasha had sent half of his army to demand its surrender. This body of troops, however, was attacked by the forces of the false prophet while advancing. Hearing the firing, Hicks Pasha came up with his whole force, and a desperate struggle ensued. The army is alleged to have numbered 200,000, while Hicks Pasha had about 25,000 men and ten British officers. These numbers, however, are reduced in other dispatches to 20,000 and 10,000 respectively, and presumably no accurate statement of the force engaged has been obtained. The fighting began on the 3rd inst. and closed on the 5th, resulting in the complete rout of the Egyptian forces.

The false prophet, who by this decisive victory becomes an alarming power in Egyptian affairs, claims to be the Imam Mahdi, or the last prophet Allah will send, to conquer the enemies of Islam and rule supreme over the world. The Imam Mahdi is to come, according to Mohammedan belief, accompanied with great signs and wonders, and he will appear shortly before the judgment day. The Imam Mahdi must be a visible ruler with power and victory on his side, and as the present pretender is in a position to spread the report that he is killing his enemies by thousands, it is thought he may be accepted by the Moslems, and it is hard to predict what may not result in consequence of a recent great triumphal achievement of Imam Mahdi.

Hicks Pasha, the commander of the annihilated Egyptian army, was once an English officer, and is a man of the stamp of Chinese Gordon, having fought for the East India company against the Sepoys, and had also won medals in Abyssinia. General Hicks offered his sword to Egypt. Lord Mark Kerr wrote to the Times of Tuesday: "He was no ambitious youth who had hopes to gain renown by reckless daring, but a sturdy, strong-minded man of middle age." When he went to complete the Egyptian campaign El Mahdi had become formidable. He had issued from a cave on the White Nile, gathered thousands of fanatical Arabs around his green flag, levelled mosques in El Obeid, the capital of Kordofan, and wasted the country around Khartoum. Then Hicks Pasha began a march compared with which General Roberts' march into space from Candahar to Cabul was easy. His troops, a remnant of Arabi's army, regarded the campaign as a penance for their revolt. Their sole military art was forming squares, against which El Mahdi's horsemen rode fearlessly. They opposed no enthusiasm to the reckless ardour of the Moslem fighting for their sacred faith. Hunger, hardship and famine had decimated their ranks, and, cut off from their base of operations, left without food or ammunition, they were reduced to such straits that the heart even of the dauntless traveller, Edmund O'Donovan, failed. Meeting the Egyptian army of relief of El Obeid, they were all cut down and left to perish in the sand. Since the massacre of the Egyptian expedition to Cabul there is no comparable disaster.

"Why, Angelina, where did you get those beautiful rich colors on your bonnet?" "Ain't they lovely? Lilyel dyed them with the Triangle Package Dyes." 10c.

Dinwoodie Bros. are again in the grain business, and are buying at Campbellford and at Hoard's station. William Donald is in charge of their transactions at the latter place.

Poultry raising is profitable if it is sensibly and methodically pursued. As a branch of farming that requires so little handwork, and carries with it so much enjoyment, and takes up so little space about a farm, we know of nothing that could take its place equally profitable. To run a farm, large or small, without a well-arranged chicken department, would seem to lack a feature that would be noticed by every one, and cut off a steady supply of ready money for household purposes that would soon be felt and regretted. Yes, we repeat, poultry raising is profitable, a pleasant pastime, rather than a labor, and fills an ever-present purse to meet the little every-day demands of the good wife and daughters.

The amalgamation of the Credit Valley with the O. & Q. was consummated on the 19th, at a meeting of the former company. The consolidation now includes the Toronto, Grey & Bruce, the Credit Valley, and the Ontario & Quebec, and before long the Northern will join the consolidation.

A terribly sudden death overtook Mrs. Mullett, wife of Joseph Mullett, who resides a short distance from Madoc village, on Monday morning (19th). Mrs. Mullett had been to the M. E. church in the village the evening before in her usual health. She got up as usual Monday morning, and had her breakfast, but shortly afterwards was attacked with pains in her heart, and before medical assistance could be summoned had expired.

Some time ago an old man named Patrick Gardiner arrived in Kingston from Smith's Falls, and sought admittance to the hospital. He was admitted, and made as comfortable as possible, and shortly after he was confined to his bed and unable to walk about. On Sunday (18th) he died, and the authorities, on opening a dirty old piece of cotton, among his effects, found that it contained a deposit receipt for $1,680 and $148 in hard cash.

A despatch from Cleveland, O., dated the 20th ult., says: A matter of considerable importance to a number of capitalists has just leaked out. Canadians are here engaged in purchase the Central Ontario railway of Canada, now being completed by the Hastings iron range. It is thought without doubt that the would-be purchasers represent the Canada Pacific railway. Mr. Ritchie, president of the Central railway, was interviewed, but refused to give any information on the subject further than the fact that parties had offered to purchase the road.

The newspapers are accused of helping to set in motion the social panic wave which is sweeping over the country just now by publishing in too minute details the particulars of suicides. This induces the Hamilton Spectator to remark: "People either forget or do not know that not more than one-half the stories of crime and wrong-doing which are sent into a newspaper office are published. That the greatest care is continually being exercised in the separation of the wheat from the chaff. As a general thing the newspaper of to-day is higher in tone than the community in which it is published."

A young lady engaged a room at the Brunswick, Colborne. The next night she left for Toronto. Shortly afterwards a valise containing a gold watch belonging to Mrs. Boyer was missed, and suspicion rested on the departed. Next morning Mr. Hicks left for the purpose of overtaking the woman and reclaiming the stolen property. At Port Hope he caught sight of her coming on board the train. Grasping her by the arm, he ordered her in peremptory tones to "deliver up that watch." She instantly complied with his demand, and Mr. Hicks returned with the stolen property, the owner of which was gladly surprised at its restoration, as it was a valuable heirloom.

Wm. Ferguson, who had charge of the construction of the Central Ontario railway from Malone to some distance north of Millbridge, was very handsomely treated by the president of the company, Mr. Ritchie. The compliment took the substantial form of a cheque for one hundred dollars, which Mr. Ritchie sent him, to show his appreciation of the quality and quantity of work he had performed. There were eighty-seven rock cuts on the nineteen miles of Mr. Ferguson's work, some of them quite extensive, but notwithstanding the expensive character of the work it is said that the road is one of the best in the dominion. The work has considerably exceeded the company's estimate, which is not surprising considering the character of the country traversed.

John McArthur, mate of the brig Peter and John 14 years ago, now a respectable farmer in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, has made the following statement to the Antigonish (Nova Scotia) Avenue: "I was the first mate of the brig Peter and John, belonging to Capt. Forrestall, McLaughlan master, from Wilmington, N.C., bound to Cork. One stormy night, while we were in 45 degrees north latitude and 20 degrees west longitude, the second mate, William Chambers, a disrepute man, had the middle watch. We were running under a lower maintopsail at the time. In the morning Chambers reported that a vessel about two points to the weather bow had been firing off great rockets. The captain was very much surprised at that report, coming as it did six hours late. The brig could easily have borne down to the vessel in distress if a report had been given in time. The captain did not report, as he was afraid of getting into trouble. On arriving in Boston we heard of the loss of the City of Boston, and as it is supposed that she was lost about that latitude and longitude, it is possible that the vessel in distress was the City of Boston. It is now over 13 years since this event, and if any of the crew of the Peter and John are alive they can make the statement. If that was the ill-fated vessel, the story here narrated makes her sad loss doubly due to brains muddled with alcohol.

The news has come over the cable repeatedly, and we have been assured from Rideau hall, that the queen is out of danger and her health restored. But health is not restored, neither is she out of danger; and it is all but too certain that one of the best sovereigns the throne of England has ever known draws near the close of her reign. The personal attendants of the queen have been in possession of information for many years past which would have proved valuable food for gossip, but much that they had so delicately and properly withheld has become an open secret. It is now known that for many years past the queen has been the victim of idiosyncracies, of those mental phenomena which have appeared in many members of her family, in some taking the form of hopeless insanity. For many years her majesty has been a confirmed spiritualist, and it has just passed into history that once a momentous public question during the Palmerston administration was pressing for the royal sanction, but the queen refused to give her consent till she had time to take "certain counsel on the matter." We can imagine the surprise with which Palmerston would hear his sovereign talk of other "counsel" than that of her constitutional advisers; but his mistress simply sought out John Brown, who was her spiritual medium, and with him held counsel with her deceased consort. There are thousands of spiritualists who are sane and rational, but that can scarcely be called a mens sana that will rest its judgment upon the whispers which a fat servant eats es from the vasty deep. Be all that it may, the health and mind of her majesty are now, it is an open secret, both so impaired as to convince the medical attendants that the worst cannot be far off. Their royal patient has been subjected to two overwhelming shocks, the death of her servant, friend and medium, John Brown, and the personal accident. The one has plunged her into a pitiable mental condition, the latter has inflicted an irrecoverable physical shock. We should be prepared, therefore, for a contingency which would not be less one giving cause for national sorrow and regret because it seems inevitable.—Hamilton Tribune.

Gold Mining in North Hastings.

F. W. Gray, president, and S. S. Wallbridge, secretary of the Victoria Gold Mining Co., have returned from the Victoria gold mine, whither they were sent by the company to join other parties in the north and make a full and exhaustive examination of the company's property as possible. Mr. Gray is a practical gold miner of years of experience in different parts of the world, and has an extensive reputation for knowledge of the business he ever examined. We are informed by a member of the committee that the result of the examination made by Mr. Gray and other practical miners present fully confirmed this opinion. News-Argus Clubbing List for 1884!

We have beenenabled to make very satisfactory clubbing arrangements for 1884 with a few of the best leading agricultual and other papers, purely in the interest of our subscribers, and can now offer the following inducements:

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Rural Canadian together for $1.60. See advertisement elsewhere.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the American Farmer together for $1.35. The American Farmer is a neatly printed, well edited monthly, published at Port Wayne, Ind., at $1 per year. We can supply it with our paper $1.35. This is the boss offer.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and Grip, Canada's now famous Cartoon sheet, for $2.60. Grip is published weekly at $2 per year, and every issue is full of wit and wisdom.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Weekly Globe together for $1.80.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Toronto Daily World for $3.10.

THE NEWS-ARGUS and the Montreal Weekly Witness for $1.85.

Samples of the papers named in this list n be seen at this office.

HOME MATTERS.

Rev. Mr. Stratton continues poorly, and has been unable to preach for two Sabbaths.

A second furnace has been put in the M. E. church, and the building can now be brought to a comfortable temperature.

Mr. A. Shannon has been employed by Mr. W. C. Reid, the energetic dealer in fruit trees, plants, etc., and will make his headquarters at Stirling, working entirely in this section.

The Fisk jubilee singers were poorly patronized on their last tour through this section. Their prices are rather extortionate, and many people really cannot afford to attend, while their singing is said by some to be quite inferior to their former efforts.

Dunk, son of Mr. Samuel Montgomery, of Campbellford, aged 18 years, on Saturday last, was accidentally shooting from a boat on the river when his gun kicked, throwing him backward out of the boat, and he was drowned before he could be rescued. The body was recovered shortly after.

We are informed that different parties holding the Grand Junction railway debenture of the township of Rawdon are at times sending to the reeve, the clerk, and others, notices to pay the interest coupons. The money for this purpose is deposited in the Bank of Commerce at Belleville, as provided, and is payable there only.

The ladies of St. John's church intend holding a Christmas tea, in connection with which will be a concert and Christmas tree, in Bennett's hall on Wednesday Dec. 26th. Those wishing to make presents to friends can utilize the tree, and donations will be gratefully received by the ladies, which may be left at the parsonage, at Mrs. Boldrick's, or at Mrs. Potts'.

The C. M. missionary meetings on the Stirling circuit were quite successful, or more so, than usual. The deputations announced were in attendance, and the interest was satisfactory. The amount raised at the Stirling meeting on Wednesday night was $108.02. The amount at Reid's surpassed any previous year. A fuller statement will be given when the final returns are brought in.

It will be remembered that Sir John Macdonald was unseated in Lennox county through the corruption of agents, chiefly A. H. Roe, M.P.P. Roe seems to be a very wicked man—even too wicked for a politician, and has done his party incalculable mischief by gross immorality and skepticism, the effect of which is seen in the new election held on Monday, when Mr. Allison, the Reform candidate, was elected over Mr. Pruyn, Conservative, by a majority of five votes. Perhaps this will be a lesson to both sides.

Mr. R. Roy, of Huntingdon, is possessed of a colt which is rather wild, and but few could handle it. On Sunday night, 19th inst., some parties entered his barn, harnessed the colt to a buggy, and left for parts unknown. Mr. Roy telegraphed from Stirling, and Madoc to different points, and despatched men in all directions to search for the missing animal. Constable Sills, of Madoc, was the successful man, coming across the colt near Stirling, near Campbellford, where they had been turned loose into a field, but the thieves could not be found.

The miserable impecuniosity of soul which has always characterized the Ontario and its proprietor is again cropping out. Throughout newspaperdom it is an accepted practice for daily papers to exchange with all weeklies published in their own immediate vicinity, and especially in their own county. This courtesy has been extended to THE NEWS-ARGUS by the Intelligencer promptly, but very irregularly by the Ontario, which has always arrived with an unsatisfactory uncertainty. A month or two since, however, the daily stopped coming altogether, and in its stead was sent the weekly, which, being published the same time of week as THE NEWS-ARGUS, is utterly useless for the purposes to which exchanges are usually put, and the whole incident takes the form of an ill-bred snub to a friendly neighbor. The Ontario may keep both its daily and weekly, as we are not dependent upon either one for local news, as it is on its contemporaries.

Marmora News.

From Our Own Correspondent.

On Wednesday evening, 14th inst., the Marmora brass band gave the concert which had been advertised to come off at that time. The audience, knowing that the band had been but recently organized, did not expect the programme to be of the highest order, and consequently were not disappointed. Dr. Jones, having been nominated to the chair, gave a short address, in which he alluded to the great age of instruments such as are now used by brass bands. Following him the band gave a selection, which was great applause. The remainder of the programme consisted, with the exception of another piece by the band, of vocal and instrumental music given by ladies and gentlemen from Stirling and Madoc. The gold ring, which was competed for by Miss Conley, of Stirling, and Miss Pringle, of Marmora, was won by the latter, she having won 855, and Miss Conley 821. The band, however, in appreciation of Miss Conley's services, presented her with a silver bracelet, for which she thanked the audience. Financially the concert was a success. In other respects, if the programme had been gone through with a little more dispatch, and with shorter pauses between the pieces, we think the audience would have been better pleased.

A burglary was attempted here some time during Saturday night, 17th inst., in the store of Carscallen & Gladney. Nothing, however, was taken, as the two young men who sleep in a room over the store were awakened by the noise made by the would-be robbers and hastened down to see what was the matter. Before they could make their appearance, the thieves, fearing they were discovered, fled. No damage was done except the breaking of a pane of glass in one of the front doors, which it is supposed was smashed by the thieves in making their hurried exit. There were also indications of the thieves having visited some other buildings in the place, but no losses are reported. Heads of families now are very carefully looking after revolvers and shotguns, and will be ready to give these uninvited visitors a reception suitable to the occasion, should they find it proper to call again.

Mr. G. McWilliams has completed the alteration and improvements he has been for some time engaged in the house he bought of Mr. T. P. Pearce, and has moved his family and business into it. The new house is called the Royal Hotel. In honor of the occasion, the Marmora band the other evening serenaded Mr. McM. and inmates of the house.

Madoc News.

From our own Correspondent.

A soiree was held last Friday evening in Rusen's Presbyterian church, for the purpose of procuring prizes for the public school children. The evening was everything that heart could wish, and the recent snow storm made the sleighing magnificent. Miss M. Beatty sang the opening song, after which both old and young (more particularly the small boys) fell to and did ample justice to the enjoyable repast furnished by the teachers' young lady friends. After tea Mr. Henry Robinson was unanimously elected chairman of the meeting. Rev. Mr. Oakley (C. M.) gave the speech of the evening. His advice to the young folk was simply excellent, and a number of them appeared as if they were the very willing to act upon it. Owing to the inability of the other speakers to attend, the spaces made by their absence were kindly filled by Miss M. Beatty, who, besides playing several instrumental solos, sang in her most lively and bewitching manner "Under the rood-trees," "Bonnie Dundee," and "He's only a boy, you know." Mr. Peters, of Eldorado, read in a masterly style a "Colored gentleman's experience of entering Heaven." A solo by Miss Connors, of Rawdon, was greatly appreciated. Miss English, accompanied by her sister, Miss R. English, sang "Cantilena" in an exceedingly sweet and pleasing manner. The benediction was pronounced by the rev. gentleman, after which the crowd dispersed, to their respective homes, feeling satisfied that a most enjoyable evening had been spent. Many thanks are to be given to the young ladies of the section, and to Mr. Meikle-john, for their untiring efforts to make the meeting a success. The proceeds amounted to nearly $25.

Quittings are all the rage around here. One was held at the house of one of our fair friends last week. A very pleasant time was spent by the young people in the evening.

It seems as if Christmas is to deprive us of all our teachers. Miss Reid returns to Lindsay, Miss McKinnel will spend vacation at home in Orillia, Mr. Meikle-john takes a school near Campbelford, and Mr. Peters intends joining his friends in Manitoba.

Deer are very plentiful this season. Three young sportsmen succeeded in shooting three on the 22nd.

X AND Y.

The False Prophet.

The decisive victory achieved by the "false prophet," as called last week, puts an entirely new face upon matters in Egypt. The battle occurred near El Obeid, to which place Hicks Pasha had sent half of his army to demand its surrender. This body of troops, however, was attacked by the forces of the false prophet while advancing, and during the firing Hicks Pasha came up with his whole force, and a desperate struggle ensued. The army is alleged to have numbered 200,000, while Hicks Pasha had about 25,000 men and ten British officers. These numbers, however, are reduced in other dispatches to 20,000 and 10,000 respectively, and presumably no accurate statement of the force engaged has been obtained. The fighting began on the 3rd inst. and closed on the 5th, resulting in the complete rout of the Egyptian forces.

The false prophet, who by this decisive victory becomes an alarming power in Egyptian affairs, claims to be the Imam Mahdi, or the last prophet Allah will send to conquer the enemies of Islam and rule supreme over the world. The Imam Mahdi is to come, according to Mohammedan belief, accompanied with great signs and wonders, and he will appear shortly before the judgment day. The Imam Mahdi must be a visible and very powerful reality on his side, and as the present pretender is in a position to spread the report that he is killing his enemies by thousands, it is thought he may be accepted by the Moslems, and it is hard to predict what may not result in consequence of the recent great triumph achieved of Imam Mahdi.

Hicks Pasha, the commander of the annihilated Egyptian army, was once an English officer, and is a man of the stamp of Chinese Gordon, having fought for the East India company against the Sepoys, and had also won medals in Abyssinia. General Hicks offered his sword to Egypt. Lord Mark Kerr wrote to the Times of Tuesday: "He was no ambitious youth who had hopes to gain renown by reckless daring, but a sturdy, strong-minded man of middle age." When he went to complete the Egyptian campaign El Mahdi had become formidable. He had issued from a cave on the White Nile, gathered thousands of fanatical Arabs around his green flag, levelled mosques in El Obeid, the capital of Kordofan, and wasted the country around Khartoom. Then Hicks Pasha began a march compared with which General Roberts' march into space from Candahar to Cabul was easy. His troops, a remnant of Arab's army, regarded the campaign as a penance for their revolt. Their sole military art was forming squares, against which El Mahdi's horsemen rode fearlessly. They opposed no enthusiasm to the reckless valour of the Moslem fighting for their prophet. Disease, hardship and famine decimated their ranks, and, cut off from their base of operations, left without food and water, they were reduced to such straits that, when even one of the dauntless traveller, Edmund O'Donovan, failed. Meeting the enemy before the walls of El Obeid, they were all cut down and left to perish in the sand. Since the massacre of the English expedition to Cabul there is no comparable disaster.

"Why, Angelina, where did you get those beautiful rich colors on your bonnet?" "Ain't they lovely? I dyed them with the 'Triangle Package Dyes.' 10c."

Dawsonville Bros. are again in the grain business, and are buying at Campbellford and at Heard's station. William Donald is in charge of their transactions at the latter place.

Poultry raising is profitable if it is sensibly and methodically pursued. As a branch of farming that requires so little bankwork, and carries with it so much enjoyment, and takes up so little space about a farm, we know of nothing that could take its place equally profitable. To run a farm, large or small, without a well-arranged chicken department, would seem to lack a feature that would be noticed by every one, and cut off a steady supply of ready money for household purposes that would soon be felt and regretted. Yes, we repeat, poultry raising is profitable, a pleasant pastime, rather than a labor, and fills an ever-present purse to meet the little every day demands of the good wife and daughters.

The amalgamation of the Credit Valley with the O & Q was consummated on the 19th, at a meeting of the former company. The consolidation now includes the Toronto, Grey & Bruce, the Credit Valley, and the Ontario & Quebec, and before long the Northern will join the consolidation.

A terribly sudden death overtook Mrs. Mullett, wife of Joseph Mullett, who resides a short distance from Madoc village, on Monday morning (19th). Mrs. Mullett had been to the M. E. church in the village the evening before in her usual health. She got up as usual Monday morning, and had her breakfast, but shortly afterwards was attacked with pains in her heart, and before medical assistance could be summoned had expired.

Some time ago an old man named Patrick Gardiner arrived in Kingston from Smith's Falls, and sought admittance to the hospital. He was admitted, and made as comfortable as possible, and shortly after he was confined to his bed and unable to walk alone. On Sunday (18th) he died, and the authorities, on opening a dirty old piece of cotton, among his effects, found that it contained a deposit receipt for $1,680 and $148 in hard cash.

A despatch from Cleveland, O., dated the 20th ult., says: A matter of considerable importance to a number of capitalists has just leaked out. Canadians are here endeavoring to purchase the Central Ontario railway in Canada, now being completed to the Hastings iron range. It is thought without doubt that the would-be purchasers represent the Canada Pacific railway. Mr. Ritchie, president of the Central railway, was interviewed, but refused to give any information on the subject further than the fact that parties had offered to purchase the road.

The newspapers are accused of helping to set in motion the suicidal wave which is sweeping over the country just now by publishing in too minute details the particulars of suicides. This induces the Hamilton Spectator to remark: "People either forget or do not know that not more than one-half the stories of crime and wrong-doing which are sent into a newspaper office are published. That the greatest care is continually being exercised in the separation of the wheat from the chaff. As a general thing the newspaper of to-day is higher in tone than the community in which it is published."

A young lady engaged a room at the Brunswick, Colborne. The next night she left for Toronto. Shortly afterwards a valuable gold watch belonging to Mrs. Boyer was missed, and suspicion rested on the departed. Next morning Mr. Hicks left for the purpose of overtaking the woman and reclaiming the stolen property. At Port Hope he caught sight of her coming on board the train. Grasping her by the arm, he ordered her in peremptory tones to "deliver up that watch." She instantly complied with his demand, and Mr. Hicks returned with the stolen property, the owner of which was gladly surprised at its restoration, as it was a valuable heirloom.

Wm. Ferguson, who had charge of the construction of the Central Ontario railway from Madoc to some distance north of Millbridge, was very handsomely treated by the president of the company, Mr. Ritchie. As compliment took the substantial form of a cheque for one hundred dollars, which Mr. Ritchie sent him, to show his appreciation of the quality and quantity of work he had performed. There were eighty-seven rock cuts on the nineteen miles of Mr. Ferguson's work, some of them quite extensive, but notwithstanding the expensive character of the work it is said that the road is one of the best in the dominion. The work has considerably exceeded the company's estimate, which is not surprising considering the character of the country traversed.

John McArthur, mate of the brig Peter and John 14 years ago, now a respectable farmer in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, has made the following statement to the Antigonish (Nova Scotia) Aurora: "I was the first mate of the brig Peter and John, belonging to Capt. Forrestall, McLaughlan master, from Wilmington, N.C., bound to Cork. One stormy night, while we were in 48 degrees north latitude and 20 degrees west longitude, the second mate, William Chambers, a dissipated man, had the middle watch. We were running under a heavy mainstopsail at the time. In the morning Chambers reported that a vessel about two points to the weather bow had been firing off great rockets. The captain was very much annoyed at this report, coming as it did six hours late. The brig could scarcely have borne down to the vessel in distress if a report had been given in time. The captain did not report, as he was afraid of getting into trouble. On arriving in Boston we heard of the loss of the City of Boston, and, as it is supposed that she was lost about that latitude and longitude, it is possible that the vessel in distress was the City of Boston. It is now over 13 years since this event, and if any of the crew of the Peter and John are alive they can make the statement. If that was the ill-fated vessel, the story here narrated makes her sad loss doubly due to brains muddled with alcohol.

The news has come over the cable repeatedly, and we have been assured from Rideau hall, that the queen is out of danger and her health restored. But health is not restored, neither is she out of danger; and it is all but too certain that one of the best sovereigns the throne of England has ever known draws near the close of her reign. The personal attendants of the queen have been in possession of information for nearly years past which would have proved valuable food for gossip, but much that they had so delicately and properly withheld has become an open secret. It is now known that for many years past the queen has been the victim of idiosyncracies, of those mental phenomena which have appeared in many members of her family, in some taking the form of hopeless insanity. For many years her majesty has been a confirmed spiritualist, and it has just leaked into history that once a momentous public question during the Palmerston administration was pressing for the royal sanction, but the queen refused to give her consent till she had time to take "certain counsel on the matter." We can imagine the surprise with which Palmerston would hear his sovereign talk of other "counsel" than that of her constitutional advisers; but his mistress simply sought out John Brown, who was her spiritual medium, and with him held counsel with her deceased consort. There are thousands of spiritualists who are sane and rational, but that can scarcely be called a sense sane that will rest its judgment upon the whispers which a fat servant carries from the vasty deeps. Be all that as it may, the health and mind of her majesty are now, it is an open secret, both so impaired as to convince the medical attendants that the worst cannot be far off. Their royal patient has been subjected to two overwhelming shocks, the death of her servant, friend and medium, John Brown, and the personal accident. The one has plunged her into a pitiable mental condition, the latter has inflicted an irrecoverable physical shock. We should be prepared, therefore, for a contingency which would not be less one giving cause for national sorrow and regret because it seems inevitable.—Hamilton Tribune.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Pope does not seem to relish the wholesale deportation of Irishmen from Ireland. Neither would any sensible person. To bring our ship loads of such persons to the Canadian North West, would simply be to consign them to protracted misery and ultimate starvation. Try something else more feasible.

Who would in certain circumstances be ambassadors? Ordinary mortals would choose positions less prominent and more secure. The Malagasy ambassadors who lately returned from their mission to France and England greatly unsuccessful have been strangled. This is bad for the poor men and not very encouraging to others to undertake such risky work. They very likely, however, knew the rake, and chose to run them.

Gladstone, like a sensible man as he is, wishes to keep up and intensify the friendly relationship subsisting between France and England. There is no better guarantee for the peace of the world than that these two nations should pull well together, and there is no substantial reason why they should not. They can do each other enormous harm, by distrust and enmity. They can do a corresponding good by living in friendliness and good fellowship. Why not do so?

There is a project on foot for making a canal from Acre to the Jordan and down through that river to the Dead Sea and through the valley of El-Arabah to the Eastern branch of the Red Sea. It would be a gigantic work; but it is said not to be impracticable. Indeed, in those days every thing resolves itself into a question of money. We hope that the project will be carried out successfully and that it will more than realize all the hopes connected with its completion.

The story goes that at a prayer meeting one of the worshippers came out with an Amen at a singularly inappropriate place. This so enraged the man who was reading the devotions that after meeting the two had a round of fisticuffs over the matter. Others were drawn into the strife, and before the play was all played out, two men were badly bruised and other two actually stabbed. This was the church militant with a vengeance. In Canada things are not yet quite so bad.

What is courage? Cardinal Manning says that it does not consist in the absence of fear but in its subjugation. Some of the bravest of men have had the most intense perception of danger, and the most sensible apprehension of its future consequences. But fear has not swayed them to the right or left. The brave man conquers his fears. The coward is conquered by them. Are the British nation as a whole brave in this sense? If deeds are to speak for them there ought not to be much doubt on that point.

Wherever one looks there are apparently trouble and uncertainty. All the East of Europe is in a condition of ferment which at any moment may burst out in confusion and mutual slaughter. Who knows but that when the spring comes, if not before, one of the most terrific as also one of the most general wars that has been known will break out, to come to an end who shall say when? Well, perhaps even that may be found better than the present miserable condition of uncertainty and suffering which appears to be all round.

We cannot see why such an outcry should be made against General Luard and his supposedly sharp doings with the volunteers. He is sent for the very purpose of making them toe the mark. If he were merely to pay unmeaning compliments what would be the use of him at all at all? He is expected to tell even officers the truth about their soldierly qualities or the reverse. Why blame him when he does so? God help the country, but a great many of those volunteers, both officers and privates, have great need to be told the truth, for they are slovenly, undrilled fellows.

It is said that Gladstone is provided with bumps in a first rate fashion. He ought to be, if these protuberances bear any proportion to the gifts of which the honorable gentleman is possessed. It is to be hoped that such is the fact, for he is a very big man both morally and intellectually and even physically, he is a wonder. It is not to be supposed that everybody could become something like Gladstone if as careful of physical health as the British Premier has been. But there can be no doubt of the fact, that were such the case, there would be a great deal more comfort in the world, and there would be great deal more good and useful intellectual work would be done.

France seems to have taken in hand with a larger contract with this Tonquin business than she bargained for. At present they can hardly hold their own, without the intervention of the Chinese. Should war be declared by the latter, it would be a very heavy drain upon French resources before the end which men call peace shall have been reached. It is calculated that 10,000 Frenchmen will be sufficient. Well for France if twice that number bring her off with flying colors. England talks of proposing something like mediation. Surely that ought to be possible. It would save a great many innocent lives, and to the uninitiated it ought to be as good, if not better, for protecting national as well as individual honor.

There is a proposal in some quarters to abolish sermons altogether and have religious service without their supposedly necessary adjuncts. We fear the plan would not be a successful one. There are, no doubt, a good many stupid sermons, but the general run of them are not of that order, let grumblers say what they please. Public worship would be deprived of its most vivifying elements if the sermon were dropped. And it is to be feared that acquaintance with religious matters altogether would suffer very considerably from the change. By all means let the sermons be as good as possible. That will be found a better plan than abolishing them. After all are the sermons so bad as they are sometimes described?

There promises to be trouble in the States over the color question. There is a soreness among the colored population over the rejection by the Supreme Court of the Civil Rights Act, and some are ready in their soreness to turn against the Republicans, as if they were to blame, and to cast in their lot with the Democrats, as if that would not put them out of the frying pan into the fire. Let the colored inhabitants of the States of every shade be ambitious to rise in intelligence, wealth and general respectability and they will more thoroughly and more speedily put down all their social disabilities than if they had as many Acts of Congress for that purpose as would thatch the face of the universe. Yes, good friends, keep at rising socially by good conduct and you will rise.

We have long been of opinion that the wise policy of the prohibitionists is to capture one of the great existing parties rather than to spend many years in building up a third political party, based on prohibition principles. The results in connection with the recent State elections in Ohio and Iowa go a long way towards strengthening this opinion. In both States prohibition was a burning question before the people, and the prospects in both States seemed about equally good. In Iowa the temperance men captured the Republican party, and prohibition was made a plank in their platform for this year. There was Strength in this Union, and their candidates were elected by good majorities, notwithstanding the considerable defection of the beer-drinking German vote. In Ohio there was no such fusion, and both the Republicans and the Prohibitionists had their separate tickets, and both were defeated. The prohibitionists were also defeated in connection with the prohibition constitutional amendments to which they had fixed their hearts. Probably, had the two parties united the Republic ticket could have been carried, and the constitutional amendment could have been carried. From all quarters it looks as though the third party movement is a huge blunder on the part of the temperance men. It would probably be a much greater blunder in Canada than in the United States.

It is quite true that the husband has every day a very blessed opportunity for diffusing sunshine in his home. The wife is within four walls from morning to dinner time, has to bear all the worry from fretful children, useless servants, weak nerves and callers coming when they ought not. He on the other hand has been all around—out of doors—in the air—meeting with friends—discussing all manner of questions—in contact with the outer world and so forth. Why should he not come home and be pleasant as may be? Why should he bring a cloud into the house where there may have been enough of mistiness all the day? All true, but has he had no worries that need soothing and so forth? Have there been no money difficulties to put him out? No stupids who have insulted him? No nerves put rather out of order? Rather think there were. At least, might have been. In short it takes both husband and wife to make the home sunshine in the evening. And both ought to try to contribute the right proportion. By the time the evening meeting time comes round the worries of the day ought to be thrown aside. The husband ought to leave his on the doorstep, while the wife ought to throw hers out at the window, and both ought to go for as much happiness as they can manage to pack into their evening hours. They will then be the better able to take up again their respective burdens when the morning comes round, and give themselves to the battle of life with renewed vigor and with growing confidence in ultimate success.

Man the Life-Boat.

BY J. B. GOUGH.

It is worth while to work for others. It is worth something to save life. As the day broke one fearfully stormy morning a large barque ran on a bank of sand, eight miles from the British coast, and lay there at the mercy of the waves, filling with water. She rapidly began to settle, the waves breaking fiercely over her. Her boats were knocked to pieces; her hatches were forced up. Eighteen men were in the rigging, clinging to the shrouds of that sprung and broken foremast; the mainmast was gone. No hope was in their hearts; no help was nigh. But is there no hope and no help? They thought there was. Who? Who sooner as the word passed, "A wreck! a wreck!" than the gallant boatmen spring to the beach. "Man the life-boat!" Yes, but the waves are driving so furiously into shore. "Man the life-boat!" Yes, but the snow is drifting in blinding squalls. "Man the life-boat!"

One by one the noble fellows take their places. Out they dash in the teeth of the gale. "Oars out, my men. Steady. Oars out!" They are knee-deep in water. The waves beat upon them; they are drenched, and all but drowned. Yet how cheerfully they bend their backs to the ashen oars, that threaten to snap asunder with the fury of the gale! "Hold on, every man of you!" Every man holds on, whilst an immense wave rolls over, burying them fathoms deep. They rise and shake their locks. But where is the wreck? The atmosphere is so thick they cannot see it. Only part of the sinking vessel is seen. Are there any men in that tangled rigging? Yes, see! the rigging is full of them. "Now steady, men, steady! Keep clear of the wreck. Steady! Ah, we have them now!" She lays alongside, and one by one the poor, half-drowned, half-frozen wretches drop into the boat, and out she drifts into the boiling sea. Amid the peril of the return, hear them sing—and the song mingles with the roar of the storm.

"Aye, cheerily, men

And now the lookers-out on the beach hail them as the boat nears the shore. "Life-boat, ahoy! Are they all safe?" "Ay, ay, every man safe." How they do cheer! And the cheer is louder and more hearty than that which greeted the champion boat in a race. And why? Because these men have saved human life.

Are there no wrecks—wrecks of men's intellect, wrecks of men's genius, wrecks of all that makes men noble? Man the life-boat!—man the life-boat, and board them! See how they are drifting! Helm gone, compass gone. Man the life-boat! See how they are dashed by the fierce waves upon the strand, wrecked and ruined! Man the life-boat, and board them! And if so be you help some poor struggling soul from the drifting Sodom of this world's wickedness into the haven of peace and rest, cheer after cheer from human voices may never salute you; but the shining, white-robed angels shall greet you, and the souls you have saved shall be as stars for ever in the crown of your rejoicing, and God's approval shall crown your noble endeavor.

Strong Language.

The New York Herald is not much given to the advocacy of the temperance work, and sometimes has pretty hard things to say about the strong language of the temperance men. We doubt, however, if it often meets with stronger language in any temperance literature than the following from a Herald editorial of a late date. Writing of the work done by the women on election day the Herald says "And yet, what can the women of a rum-cursed State do to lessen a vice by which they and their children are the principal sufferers? It may be said that they can make their homes more attractive; but to the habitual tippler the dirtiest grog-shop is a more delightful place than the cosiest family fireside in the world."

War Tactics.

Grocer's wife, anxiously: "Oh, Jim, are you hurt?"

Grocer, savagely, but with dignity: "Go away woman! what do you know about war?"

Circulars for ladies in mourning have full linings of black Astracan and deep borders of this fur.

FASHION NOTES.

Shirred yokes and full waists are again in vogue.

Cloth bonnets are much worn with cloth costumes.

Velvet flowers are dividing favor with feathers in Paris.

Chinchilla and silver fox are the favorites among the gray furs.

Black Russian lace is the most beautiful of the inexpensive black lace.

Fur-lined garments are made in shapes similar to those of sealskin.

Sealskin muffs are larger this season than last, and continue to increase in size.

Red fox is a lining fur much in favor, as is also the brown fox and mink fur.

Among the brown furs sable, mink, and natural beaver divide popular favor.

Many of the short black garments are elaborately trimmed with black fox fur.

Double balayeuses of muslin and lace are made the skirts of short velvet dresses.

The soft felt hat, with the brim rolled high at the sides, is the popular shopping hat.

The newest thing in furs is the high-shouldered pereline with high standing collar.

Pearl-colored fur-linings for both fur-lined dolmans and circulars are most preferred.

Parisian women are powdering the hair and arranging it à la Mary Stuart in the evening.

Natural beaver, both in its light and dark shades, is quite popular among young ladies.

The great majority of the new street bonnets are of felt, but they are trimmed with velvet.

European ladies are carefully matching the shade of the dress in all the toilet accessories.

Woolen textures generally, of a rough and hairy nature, are being worn as outdoor costumes.

Velvet is used for everything in Paris—dresses, cloaks, bonnets, and even the trimmings of these bonnets.

Golden brown cloth suits with rosa gilt braid are made by Paris tailors in the styles in favor with English ladies.

A basque and drapery of Gobelin serge with antique figures and dull colors are the newest overdresses for velvet skirts.

Old-time Maltese lace design are copied in creamy white silk threads by the lace-workers in Dresden, and are used to trim evening dresses of batiste or gauze.

The fronts of elegant dress-skirts are covered with tassels, tabs, loops, or pointed ends of ribbon, or of bias velvet, bias, bars, that shake and glisten with every motion of the wearer.

Square plain front breadths and trimmed side panels are on the imported serge dresses. The drapery is very slight, but is worn over a large pillow bustle. The vest basque is short and jaunty.

Very stylish and fancy ulsters are of London smoke, or of dark blue cloth made with several close flat plaits from the throat to the hem and a full plaited back that can be looped up with buttons.

The most charming opera cloak for a young lady is of white Indian camel's-hair with genuine hand-embroidery as a border and chenille fringe on the edge. The style is a short dolman, and the lining is pale rose brocaded velvet.

Young ladies' velvet costumes are accompanied by a shoulder-cape of the velvet with slender tabs in front and dolman side-pieces that are full and high on the shoulders. A standing collar, three or four inches high, is stiffened like an old-fashioned sock.

Velvet-spotted ottoman silk is stylish when combined with plain velvet. Parisian dress for walking or driving, has moss-green silk with red and brown velvet dots for the basque, with a blouse vest or plain brown satin. The skirt is brown velvet and the panniers of the spotted silk.

Mantles are made of colored velvet, and are especially elegant in dark red or brown brocho velvet, combined with repped ferry velvet of the same color, and trimmed with a great abundance of black Escurial lace. The small bonnet is chosen of a color to match the mantle and these together may be worn with a dress of almost any color, as contrasts are quite as stylish as matching in the toilets of to-day.

For tall, slender women no wrap for cold-weather use can be found more comfortable or becoming than the long French mantle, cut excessively graceful curves in the back and half-fitting in front. The medium-priced wraps in this style are made of black ottoman silk and trimmed with full chenille and fringe and rows of chenille. The more expensive garments are made of large-patterned brocades, the designs being of raised flowers in velvet on satin grounds. Heavy quilted satin linings are more popular this season than those of fur, on account of the annoyance caused by the shedding of hairs where fur is employed.

Dark royal blue is this season a very fashionable color. New dinner and reception dresses are sent from Paris composed of this rich color, with simply

THE JONES FAMILY.

Mr Jones has an Evening at Home.

"Maria," said Mr. Jones, as he sat and enjoyed an evening at home—because he had no place else to go—"it seems to me that on a suspicious occasion like this" and he looked fondly at her—"as if Heaven and home were anonymous terms."

"Ne-onomous," corrected Mrs. Jones, taking several pins and a ball of twine out of her mouth and placing a patch on that part of Willie's jacket where it would do the most good. "Jephtha, why don't you read aloud evenings, instead of keeping all the good things to yourself?"

"Is reading allowed?" asked Jones innocently. "I thought we preferred to talk."

"Well, I do," snapped Mrs. J., "when I have somebody to talk to, which isn't very often."

"I'll read," exclaimed Jones, hurriedly reversing the book he held in his hand—"And it came to pass—"

"Save that for Sunday," interrupted Mrs. Jones. "Read some sweet thing about home, or the friends; some poetry—I love to hear you read poetry, Jephtha, with a sly wink at nobody."

Thus encouraged, Jones, who is an amateur elocutionist and has tired the neighborhood with his dramatic readings ti times past, fill the room with sounds to fire him, seized a volume of poetry and, in the voice that made "Freedom shriek when Kosciusco fell," read aloud that soothing ditty:

"Which shall it be, which shall it be?
I looked at John—John looked at me."

There was a silence that could have been felt with a rolling pin when Jones ceased to read, and wiped the foam flecks from his pallid lips, and Maria was in tears.

"I know you've written that for me," she said, in a voice that sounded small and still after his, "and they will want a drink."

"The children," murmured Jones with fixed eyes, "the dear, sweet children! M-M-Maria, do we 'preciate these dear ones as we ought.?"

"M.-do," said Mrs. Jones, shortly. "I hear them talking now—where's my slipper?"

"No, Maria, returned Jones, whose soul was melted within him by his efforts in the line of elocution. "I will go and see if the innocent darlings need anything." And he went up stairs softly, repeating with a Salvini-Rossi-Booth effect:

"Which shall it be, which shall it be?
I looked at John—John looked at me."

The "innocent darlings" heard him coming, and desisting from a pillow fight in which they were engaged, they buried their heads in the sheets and were instantly sound asleep, looking like dimpled cherubs, which occasion seemed to assert their relation to the human. Jones wiped the salt tears of love and elocution from his eyes, and bent fondly over them; then he crept out and waited a moment in the hall to listen to their gentle breathing; suddenly it ceased.

Then a dreadful suspicion haunted Jones—they had been playing possum, the little wretches; he waited.

"Is the old man gone?" were the words of Cherub No. 1, as soon as he got the sheet out of his mouth.

"Yep," answered Cherub No. 2, "he was a-crying, Willie. Ain't he a duffer, though?"

"I'll strike him for five cents to-morrow; see if I don't."

"Oh, he'll be himself again to-morrow, Willie; he'll stamp around and say, 'Get out of my way, little imps, just as he allus does. I don't take no stock in him, I don't."

"Let's play we was pa," suggested Willie. "Where's them boys? I'll teach them to touch my pipes and tan their hides for 'em. I'll show em who's master in this house."

When Jones got back to the sitting room his face was red—very red—and his eyes wore a vengeful glare. Mrs. Jones looked up at him as he stalked in, and asked innocently:

"S'witch shall it be, a'witch shall it be?"

"Both!" shouted the enraged parent. "Of all the unruly brats I ever saw, I do think, Maria, ours are the worst. I'll father them both to-morrow."

A Seventh Sense.

Sir William Thompson, the eminent professor of mathematics in the University of Glasgow, in his inaugural address delivered recently as president of the Midland institute, at Birmingham, broached the idea of the existence of a magnetic sense. This sense he called the seventh sense, to distinguish it from our other six senses—namely, those of sight, hearing, taste, smell, heat, and force. He said that, in speaking of a possible magnetic sense, he in no way supported that wretched, grovelling superstition of animal magnetism, spiritualism, mesmerism, or clairvoyance, of which they had heard so much. There was no seventh sense of a mystic kind. Clairvoyance, and so on, was the result of bad observation chiefly, mixed up with the effects of willful imposture, acting on an innocent and trusting mind. If there were not a distinct magnetic sense, it was a very great wonder that there was not. The study of magnetism was a very recondite subject. One very wonderful discovery that was made in electric magnetism was made by Foucault, an excellent French experimenter, showing that a piece of copper or a piece of silver let fall between the poles of a magnet would fall down slowly, as if through mud. Was it conceivable that, if a piece of copper could scarcely move through the air between the poles of an electric magnet, a human being or living creature in the same position would experience no effect? Lord Lindsay got an enormous magnet, so large that the head of any person wishing to try the experiment could get well between the poles, and the result of the experiment was marvellous, the marvel being that nothing was perceived. Sir William Thompson, however, was not subject to fainting when the investigation was complete. He could not think that the quality of matter in the air, which produced such a prodigious effect on a piece of metal, could be absolutely without any perceptible effect whatever on a living body. He thought the experiment was worth repeating; and it was worth examining whether or not an exceedingly powerful magnetic force was without perceptible effect on a living vegetable or animal body. His own speculations had led him to conclude that there might be a seventh or magnetic sense, and that it was possible an exceedingly powerful magnetic effect might be produced on living bodies that could be not explained by heat, force, or any other sensation.—British Medical Journal.

A charming reception toilet is of dullred velvet, with a mantle composed of plain and brocaded velvet. The basque has a blouse vest of cream and red brocaded silk, fastened by bands of red velvet and fleur-de-lis buckles of oxidized silver. The bonnet is of smooth velvet, with a crown of the brocaded velvet, and a tuft of cream and red feathers.

ISALINE.

CHAPTER I.

"Well, Mlle. Isaline," I said, strolling out into the garden, "and who is the young cavalier with the black moustache?"

"What, monsieur," answered Isaline, "you have seen him? You have been watching from our window? We did not know you had returned from the Alguille."

"Oh, yes, I've been back for more than an hour," I replied; "the snow was so deep on the Col that I gave it up, and I had made up my mind not to try it without a guide."

"I am so glad," said Isaline demurely, "I had such fears for monsieur. The Alguille is dangerous, though it isn't very high, and I had been very distractedly anxious till monsieur returned."

"Thank, mademoiselle," I answered, with a little bow. "Your solicitude for my safety flatters me immensely. But you haven't told me yet who is the gentleman with the black moustache."

Isaline smiled. "His name is M. Claude," she said: "M. Claude Eirard, you know; but we don't use surnames much among ourselves in the Pays de Vaud. He is the schoolmaster of the commune."

"M. Claude is a very happy man, then," I put in. "I envy his good fortune."

Isaline blushed a pretty blush. "On the contrary," she answered, "he has just been inclaiming against the misérable of all mankind. He says his life is not worth having."

"They always say that under these peculiar circumstances," I said. "Believe me, mademoiselle, there are a great many men would be glad to exchange their own indifferently tolerable lot for M. Claude's unendurable misery."

Isaline said nothing, but she looked at me with a peculiar inquiring look, as if she would very much like to know exactly what I meant by it, and how much I meant it.

And what did I mean by it? Not very much after all, I imagine; for when it comes to retrospect, which one of us is any good at analyzing his own motives? The fact is, Isaline was a very pretty young girl, and I had nothing else to do, and I might just as well make myself agreeable to her as gaze thoughtfully at her as a bear of an Englishman. Besides, if there was the safeguard of M. Claude, a real indigenous suitor, in the background, there wasn't much danger of my polite attentions being misunderstood.

However, I haven't yet told you how I came to find myself on the farm at Les Pentes at all. This, then, is how it all came about. I, being fresh out of the Temple, I had spent four or five brisfless years in lounging about Brick court, and dropping in casually at important cases, just to let the world see I was the possessor of well-curled wig, but even a wig (which suits my complexion admirably) palls after five years, and I said to myself that I would really get London altogether and live upon my means somewhere on the continent. Very small means, to be sure, but still enough to pull through upon in Switzerland or the Black Forest. So, just by way of experiment as to how I liked it, I packed up my fishing rod and my portmanteau (the first the most important), took the 7.18 express from the Gare de Lyon for Geneva, and that my self next afternoon comfortably seated on the veranda of my favorite hotel at Vevay. The lake is delightful, that we all know, but I wanted to get somewhere where there was a little fishing, so I struck back at once into the mountain country round Chateau d'Oex and Les Avants and came soon upon the exact thing I wanted at Les Pentes.

Picture to yourself a great amphitheatre of open alp or mountain pasture in the foreground, with peaks covered by vivid-green pines in the middle distance, and a background of petty aiguilles, naked at their base, but clad near the summit with frozen masses of sparkling ice. Put into the midst of the amphitheatre a clear green-and-white torrent, with a church surrounded by a few wooden farm-houses on its slope, and there you have the commune of Les Pentes. But what was most delightful, of all was this, that there was no hotel, no pension, not even a regular lodging-house. I was the first stranger to discover the capabilities of the village, and I was free to explore them for my own private advantage. By a stroke of luck it so happened that M. Clairon, the richest farmer of the place, with a pretty, old-fashioned Vaudois farm-house, and a pretty, dainty little Vaudois daughter, was actually willing to take me in for a mere song per week. I jumped at the chance; and the same day saw me duly installed in a pretty little room, under the eaves of the pretty little farm-house, and with the pretty little daughter politely attending to all my wants.

Do you know those old-fashioned Vaudois houses, with their big gable-ends their deep thatched roofs, their cobs of maize, and smoked hams, and other rural wealth hanging out ostentatiously under the projecting ledges? If you don't, you can't imagine what a delightful time I had of it at Les Pentes. The farm was a large one for the Pays de Vaud, and M. Clairon actually kept two servants; but madam would have been scandalized at the idea of letting "that Sara" or "that Lizette" wait upon the English voyageur, and the consequence was that Mlle. Isaline herself always came to answer my little tinkling hand-bell—it was a trifle awkward, for Mlle. Isaline was too much of a young lady not to be treated with deferential politeness; and yet there is a certain difficulty in being deferentially polite to the person who lays your table for dinner. However, I made the best of it and I'm bound to say I managed to get along very comfortably.

Isaline was one of those pretty, plump, laughing-eyed, dimple-checked, dark little girls that you hardly ever see anywhere outside the Pays de Vaud. It was almost impossible to look at her without smiling; I'm sure it was quite impossible for her to look at anyone else and not smile at them. She wore the prettiest little Vaudois caps that ever saw in your life; and she looked so coquettish in them that you must have been very hard-hearted indeed if you did not straightway fall head over ears in love with her at first sight. Besides, she had been to school at Lausanne, and spoke such pretty, delicate, nasal French. Now, my good mother thought badly of my French accent; and when I told her I meant to improve it by conversing with the girl at Switzerland, she said to me, "I do hope, Charlie dear, you will miss no opportunity of conversing with the people, and improving yourself in colloquial French a little. I am certainly the most dutiful of sons, and I solemnly assure you that, wherever I was from fishing or climbing, I missed no opportunity whatsoever of conversing with pretty little Isaline.

"Mlle. Isaline," I said on this particular afternoon, "I should much like a cup of tea; can Sara bring me one out here in the garden?"

"Certainly, monsieur; I will bring out the little table onto the grass plot," said Isaline. "That will arrange things for you much more pleasantly."

"Not for worlds," I said, running in to get it myself. But Isaline had darted into the house before me, and brought it out with her own white little hands (oh, the tiny fawn! Then she went in again, and soon reappeared with a Japanese tray—bought at Montreux specially in my honor—and a set of the finest little old China tea-things ever beheld in a London bric-a-brac cabinet.

"Won't you sit and take a cup with me, monsieur?" she said.

"Ma foi, monsieur," answered Isaline, blushing again, "I have never tasted any except as ptisane." But you other English drink it, of course. I will try it for the rest; one learns always."

I poured her out a cup and creamed it with some of that delicious Vaudois cream (nowhere in the world is it good as what you get in the Pays de Vaud—you see I am an enthusiast for my adopted country—but that is anticipating matters), and handed it over to her for her approval. She tasted it with a little moue Englishwomen don't make the moue, so, though I like sticking to my mother tongue, I must use a circumlocution to translate the word. "B-r-r-r-r, she said. "Do you English like that stuff? Well, one must accommodate one's self to it, I suppose." And, to do her justice, she proceeded to accommodate herself to it with such distinguished success that she asked me soon for another cup, and drank it off without even a murmur.

"And this M. Claude, then," I asked; "he is a friend of yours? Eh?"

"Passably," she answered, coloring slightly. "You see, we have not much society at Les Pentes. He comes from the Normal school at Geneva. He is instructed, a man of education. We see few such here. What would you have?" she added a propos de rien, as though she thought she was bound to excuse herself for having made M. Claude's acquaintance.

"But you like him very much?"

"Like him! Well, yes I liked him always well enough. But he is too haughty. He gives himself airs. To-day he is angry with me. He has no right to be angry with me."

"Mademoiselle," I said, "have you ever read Shakespeare?"

"Oh, yes, in English I have read-him. I can read English well enough, though I speak but a little."

"And have you read the 'Tempest?'"

"How! Ariel, Ferdinand, Miranda, Caliban? Oh, yes, I have."

"Well, mademoiselle," I said, "do you remember how Miranda first saw Ferdinand?"

She smiled and blushed again—she was such a little blusher. "I know what you would say," she said. "You English are blunt. You talk to young ladies so strangely."

"Well, Mlle. Isaline, it seems to me that you at Les Pentes are like Miranda on the island. You see nobody and there is nobody here to see you. You must not go and fall in love, like Miranda, with the very first man you may happen to meet with, because he comes from the Normal school at Geneva. There are plenty of men in the world, believe me, besides M. Claude."

"Ah, but Miranda and Ferdinand both loved one another," said Isaline, archly; "and they were married, and both lived happily ever afterward. I saw at once she was trying to pique me.

"How do you know that?" I asked. "It doesn't say so in the play. For all I know, Ferdinand was the crown of Naples through a revolution, and went and settled down at a country school at Savoy or somewhere, and took to drinking, and became brutally unsociable, and made Miranda's life a toil and a burden to her. At any rate, I'm sure of one thing, he wasn't worthy of her."

"What made me go on in this stupid way? I'm sure I don't know. It certainly didn't mean to marry Isaline myself; * * * at least, not definitely; and yet when you are sitting down at tea in a charming white crimped hat beside you, and you get a chance of insinuating that other fellows don't think quite so much of her as you do, it isn't human nature to let slip the opportunity of insinuating it.

"But you don't know M. Claude," said Isaline, practically, "and so you can't tell whether he is worthy of me or not."

"I am sure he is worthy of you, mademoiselle," that he can't be, even though he were a paragon of virtue, learning, and manly beauty."

"If monsieur talks in that way," said Isaline, "I shall have to go back at once to mamma."

"Wait a moment," I said, "and I will talk humbly as you wish me. You know you agreed to give me instruction in conversational French. That naturally includes lessons in conversation with ladies on exceptional personal attractions. I must practice for every possible circumstance of life. * * * So you have read Shakespeare, then. And any English books, Mlle. Isaline?"

"Oh, many. Scott, and Dickens, and all, except Byron. My papa says a young lady must not read Byron. But I read him all the same. I have hid of our lake in a book of extracts. It is a great pleasure to me to look down among the vines and chestnuts there and to think that our lake, which gleams so blue and beautiful below, is the most famous in poetry of all lakes. You know Jean-Jacques says: 'Mon lac est le premier, and so it is.'"

"Then you have read Jean-Jacques, too?"

"Oh, mon Dieu, non. My papa says a young lady must especially not read Jean-Jacques. But I know something about him—so much as is convenable. Hold here! do you see that clump of trees on the opposite side of the lake, just about Clarens? That is Julie's bosquet, 'le bosquet de Julie' we call it. There isn't a spot along the lake that is not thus famous, that has not its romance and its association. It is for that that I could not choose ever to leave the dear old Pays de Vaud."

"You would not like to live in England, then?" I asked. (What a fool I was, to be sure.)

"Oh, ma foi, no. That would make one too much sadder, with your chills, and your fogs, and your winters. I could not stand it. It is cold here, but at any rate it is sunny. * * * Well, at least, it would not be pleasant. * * * But, after all, that depends. * * * Do you like the sun, too, sometimes, don't you?"

"Isaline!" cried madame from the window, "I want you to come and help me. Sara pick over the gooseberries." And, to say the truth, I thought it was quite time she should go."

CHAPTER II.

A week later I met M. Claude again. He was a very handsome young fellow; there was not a doubt of that. He was intelligent, well educated, manly, with all the honest, sturdy, independent Swiss nature clearly visible in his frank, bright open face. I have seldom met a man whom I liked better at first sight than M. Claude, and after he had gone away I felt more than a little ashamed of myself to think I had been half trying to steal away Isaline's heart from this good fellow, without having any serious design upon it myself. It began to strike me that I had been doing a very dirty, shabby thing.

"Charlie, my boy," I said to myself, as I sat fishing with bottom bait and dangling my legs over the edge of a pool, "you've been flirting with this pretty little peasant girl, and it's very mean of you to have been flirting in a very bad sort of way. She's got a lover of her own; and you've been trying to make her feel dissatisfied with her own worthy swain. You've taken advantage of your position and your fancied London airs and graces to run fancied London airs and graces to run her down by implication in good fellow, who really loves her, and would probably make her an excellent husband. Don't let this occur again, sir. And having thus virtuously resolved, of course I went away and flirted with Isaline next morning as vigorously as ever.

During the following fortnight M. Claude was away in Geneva, and I could not disguise from myself the fact that M. Claude did not quite like me. This was odd, for I liked him very much. I suppose he took me for a potential rival; men are so jealous when they are in love. Besides, I observed that Isaline tried not to be thrown too much with him alone; tried to include me in the party whenever she went with him. And, to do her justice, she felt that I felt myself everyday more fond of Isaline's society, and I half fancied I caught myself repudiating a little inward joy now and then when she happened to come up to me. Absurd to be so susceptible, but such is man.

One lovely day about this time I set out once more to try my hand (or rather my feet) alone upon the Alguille. Isaline put me up a nice little light lunch in my knapsack, and insisted upon seeing that my alpenstock was shod with hob, and my pedestrian boots in due climbing order. In fact, she loudly lamented my perversity in attempting to make the ascent without a guide, and insisted on accompanying walk with me as far as the little bridge over the torrent beside the snow line, to point out the road the guides generally took to the plateau on the summit. For myself, I was a practiced mountaineer, and felt no fear for the result. As I left her for the ice, she stood a long time looking and waving me the right road with a little pocket-handkerchief; while as long as I could hear her voice she kept on exhorting me to be very careful. "Ah, if monsieur would only have taken a guide! You don't know how dangerous that little Alguille really is."

The sun was shining brightly on the snow, the view across the valley of the Rhone towards the snowy Alps beyond was exquisite, and the giants of the Berrese Oberland stood out in gloriously brilliant outlines on the other side against the clear blue summer sky. I was very alone, enjoying myself hugely in my own quiet fashion, and watching Isaline as she made her way slowly along the green path, looking around often and again, till I disappeared in the shadow of the pine wood that girt around the tiny village. On, further still, up and up and up, over soft snow for the most part, with very little ice, till at last, after three hours hard climbing, I stood on the very summit of the pretty Alguille. It was not very high, but it commanded a magnificent view of the Rhone valley on one hand, the counterchain of the Oberland on the other, and the blue lake gleaming and glowing through all its length in its green valley between them. There I sat down on the pure snow in the glittering sunlight, and ate the lunch that Isaline had provided for me with much gusto. Unfortunately, I also drank the contents of nearly half a flask of the lake—Yvorne, we call it, and I grow it now in my own vineyard at Pic de la Baume,—but that is anticipating again; as good a light wine as ever I ever got anywhere in Europe in these depressing days of blight and phylloxera. Now, a pint of vin du pays is not too much under ordinary circumstances for a strong young man in vigorous health, doing a hard day's muscular work with legs, arms, and sinews; but mountain air is thin and exhilarating in itself, and it tends a point to a half bottle of Yvorne which the wine's own body does not by any means usually possess. I don't mean to say we ever saw any wine does any one any positive harm; but it makes one more careless and easy-going; gives one a false sense of security, and entices one into paying attention to some dangerous or to suspicious looking bits of doubtful ice.

Well, after lunch I took a good look at the view with my field-glass, and when I had satisfied myself that I could make out our farm-house distinctly, and even saw Isaline standing on the balcony looking toward the Alguille. My heart jumped at the sight, then I thought that she was probably looking for me. Then I wonder my way down again, not by retracing my steps, but by trying a new path, which seemed to promise a more practicable one. It was not the one Isaline had pointed out, but it appeared to go more directly, and to avoid one or two of the very worst roughnesses in the place.

I was making my way back, merrily enough, when suddenly I happened to step on a little bit of loose ice, which slid beneath my feet in a very uncomfortable manner. Before I knew where I was I felt myself sliding rapidly on, with the ice clinging to my heel, and while I was vainly trying to dig my alpenstock into a firm place I sank it down into
